Agree but there may be opportunities as the Iraqi piece improves.

Also, any idea whose fighters attacked Islamist positions in Tripoli, Libya?
Worth analyzing for future purposes.

Note: Sources include Western intelligence, US intelligence and sources in the region.

1. With all of its tragic aspects, the advance of ISIL through Iraq gives the U.S. Government an opportunity to change the way it deals with the chaotic security situation in North Africa and the Middle East. The most important factor in this matter is to make use of intelligence resources and Special Operations troops in an aggressive manner, while avoiding the old school solution, which calls for more traditional military operations. In Iraq it is important that we engage ISIL using the resources of the Peshmerga fighters of the Kurdish Regional Government (KRG), and what, if any, reliable units exist in the Iraqi Army. The Peshmerga commanders are aggressive hard fighting troops, who have long standing relationships with CIA officers and Special Forces operators. However, they will need the continued commitment of U.S. personnel to work with them as advisors and strategic planners, the new generation of Peshmerga commanders being largely untested in traditional combat. That said, with this U.S. aid the Kurdish troops can inflict a real defeat on ISIL.

2. It is important that once we engage ISIL, as we have now done in a limited manner, we and our allies should carry on until they are driven back suffering a tangible defeat. Anything short of this will be seen by other fighters in the region, Libya, Lebanon, and even Jordan, as an American defeat. However, if we provide advisors and planners, as well as increased close air support for the Peshmerga, these soldiers can defeat ISIL. They will give the new Iraqi Government a chance to organize itself, and restructure the Sunni resistance in Syria, moving the center of power toward moderate forces like the Free Syrian Army (FSA). In addition to air support, the Peshmerga also need artillery and armored vehicles to deal with the tanks and other heavy equipment captured from the Iraqi army by ISIL.

3. In the past the USG, in an agreement with the Turkish General Staff, did not provide such heavy weapons to the Peshmerga, out of a concern that they would end up in the hands of Kurdish rebels inside of Turkey. The current situation in Iraq, not to mention the political environment in Turkey, makes this policy obsolete. Also this equipment can now be airlifted directly into the KRG zone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

4. Armed with proper equipment, and working with U.S. advisors, the Peshmerga can attack the ISIL with a coordinated assault supported from the air. This effort will come as a surprise to the ISIL, whose leaders believe we will always stop with targeted bombing, and weaken them both in Iraq and inside of Syria. At the same time we should return to plans to provide the FSA, or some group of moderate forces, with equipment that will allow them to deal with a weakened ISIL, and stepped up operations against the Syrian regime. This entire effort should be done with a low profile, avoiding the massive traditional military operations that are at best temporary solutions. While this military/para-military operation is moving forward, we need to use our diplomatic and more traditional intelligence assets to bring pressure on the governments of Qatar and Saudi Arabia, which are providing clandestine financial and logistic support to ISIL and other radical Sunni groups in the region. This effort will be enhanced by the stepped up commitment in the KRG. The Qataris and Saudis will be put in a position of balancing policy between their ongoing competition to dominate the Sunni world and the consequences of serious U.S. pressure. By the same token, the threat of similar, realistic U.S. operations will serve to assist moderate forces in Libya, Lebanon, and even Jordan, where insurgents are increasingly fascinated by the ISIL success in Iraq.

6. In the end the situation in Iraq is merely the latest and most dangerous example of the regional restructuring that is taking place across North Africa, all the way to the Turkish border. These developments are important to the U.S. for reasons that often differ from country to country: energy and moral commitment to Iraq, energy issues in Libya, and strategic commitments in Jordan. At the same time, as Turkey moves toward a new, more serious Islamic reality, it will be important for them to realize that we are willing to take serious actions, which can be sustained to protect our national interests. This course of action offers the potential for success, as opposed to large scale, traditional military campaigns, that are too expensive and awkward to maintain over time.

7. (Note: A source in Tripoli stated in confidence that when the U.S. Embassy was evacuated, the presence of two U.S. Navy jet fighters over the city brought all fighting to a halt for several hours, as Islamist forces were not certain that these aircraft would not also provide close ground support for moderate government forces.)

8. If we do not take the changes needed to make our security policy in the region more realistic, there is a real danger of ISIL veterans moving on to other countries to facilitate operations by Islamist forces. This is already happening in Libya and Egypt, where fighters are returning from Syria to work with local forces. ISIL is only the latest and most violent example of this process. If we don't act to defeat them in Iraq something even more violent and dangerous will develop. Successful military operations against these very irregular but determined forces can only be accomplished by making proper use of clandestine/special operations resources, in coordination with airpower, and established local allies. There is, unfortunately, a narrow window of opportunity on this issue, as we need to act before an ISIL state becomes better organized and reaches into Lebanon and Jordan.

9. (Note: It is important to keep in mind that as a result of this policy there probably will be concern in the Sunni regions of Iraq and the Central Government regarding the possible expansion of KRG controlled territory. With advisors in the Peshmerga command we can reassure the concerned parties that, in return for increase autonomy, the KRG will not exclude the Iraqi Government from participation in the management of the oil fields around Kirkuk, and the Mosel Dam hydroelectric facility. At the same time we will be able to work with the Peshmerga as they pursue ISIL into disputed areas of Eastern Syria, coordinating with FSA troops who can move against ISIL from the North. This will make certain Basher al Assad does not gain an advantage from these operations. Finally, as it now appears the U.S. is considering a plan to offer contractors as advisors to the Iraqi Ministry of Defense, we will be in a position to coordinate more effectively between the Peshmerga and the Iraqi Army.)

Hey folks -- this is ready for the book.

FYI, we've refined the second bullet under tax fairness to make it more clear what exactly we're talking about. It now reads this:

Second, I want to scale back high-income tax expenditures across the board. People claim lots of deductions on their taxes – not just wealthy Americans, all Americans. The problem is, right now, the system is upside down. Wealthy Americans can claim a more generous rate than other Americans on these deductions, because they're in a higher tax bracket. In other words, they get to save more money – in some cases, a lot more money – for the exact same deductions. That doesn't seem fair to me. Why should tax expenditures benefit the most fortunate Americans instead of the middle class? I'd start to change that, by having the wealthiest Americans deduct at a 28% rate. That's the same rate we had at the end of the Reagan Administration. It would put them much closer to middle-class families. And I'd use the money we save to make college more affordable and student debt easier to repay, which would help millions of American families.

Yep. I think that given what's gone down on the legal side across the admin we should include a number of LAs in first round - State, Treasury, IC, DoD etc. Guidance to us is to focus only on the top positions, i.e. Sec/Dep/ UnderSec but in functional terms think we need legal folks in addition to EOP staff including NSC Senior Directors and also relevant OMB/controller types in order to hit ground running on budget prep. Am putting in my memo. Also, is someone doing a review across the board of all Executive Orders - would think important on natl sec side and also for IC and to know lay of land.

stamps to take care of their own. For the children in Flint drinking poisoned water because their government doesn't think their lives matter.

I'm fighting for Larry, the worried husband I met in Waterloo last month. His wife Brenda spends hundreds of dollars each month on medicine for arthritis and osteoporosis. When they see hedge fund tycoons buying drug companies and raising prices by 4000 percent overnight, they just want to scream.

I'm fighting for Brandi, a young woman in Des Moines who was laid off six years ago in the middle of the recession. She went back to school, worked hard, got her degree. Now she's a supervisor in a restaurant, but still only makes $9.50 an hour. That's just not enough, not with kids in the house and bills to pay. She desperately needs a raise.

You shouldn't have to scream to be heard. You don't need more promises, you need more results. And we don't have time for ideas that sound good on paper but will never make a difference in your life. We need to roll up our sleeves and actually get Brandi that raise. Stand up to the drug companies so Larry and Brenda aren't all alone. Make the economy work for the struggling, the striving, and the successful.

Here's how we do it:

We need more fairness in this country, so all the wealth and opportunities don't just go to those at the top. But we can't stop there. We also need more growth in our economy, so you can find that new job, get that raise, start a small business – so you can get ahead and stay ahead. America grows when your paycheck grows. Not when multimillionaires get another tax cut.

I know what it takes to make real change in the real lives of real people -- because I've been doing it my whole life. And I'm just getting warmed up. Iowa, I'm listening you. I'm fighting for you. And I'm going to deliver.

Sara,

Valerie Jarret will reach out for Mr Podesta today regarding an appointment Mr Podesta has with Michael Drosnin. Drosnin has consistenly contacted senior staff throughout the campaign claiming to have information about future "events" involving the PE. Mr Drosnin is of record with the USSS.

If Mr Podesta would like an intel brief on Mr Drosnin I can coordinate that prior to his appointment which I was notified is at 345.

If you have any questions please let me know

Thanks

Mike

VIDEO: Right-Wing Hypocrisy On 'Mediscare'

By Jeff Spross on Jun 6, 2011 at 2:58 pm

The right wing is not happy with the rhetorical attacks the Democrats are launching against the budget recently passed by the House GOP. Conservatives complain that it's unfair criticism to note that their budget dismantles Medicare by transforming it into an exceedingly stingy voucher scheme .

Everyone — from Rep. Paul Ryan (R-WI), the architect of the budget plan, to GOP presidential hopeful Newt Gingrich, to House Majority Whip Eric Cantor (R-VA), to conservative media personality Sean Hannity — has taken up the cry that Democrats are engaging in demagogic "Mediscare " tactics. Moreover, 42 House GOP freshmen sent a letter to President Obama in May asking him "to rein in Democratic attacks on GOP members who voted for the House budget."

Given the unusually earnest — and frankly, moralistic — tone of the Republicans' objections to the Democrats' criticism of the GOP plan, it's worth reviewing exactly how these same conservative reacted to the Democrats' own health care reform package back in 2009:

Thanks for the update. Good evening everyone
Attached is tonight's updated spreadsheet. Here are a few points to draw your attention to:

1. July 1st, we have scheduled our labor policy discussions in Washington DC with our policy team. Notice has gone out.

2. Need to discuss/confirm NEA requests post-RA decision. Also, NEA has reached out twice frustrated by HRC attending NALEO and not the RA (given our conference position). It would be helpful to have a response to NALEO question and feedback back on their other requests.
-RA Video
-Teletown Hall with members and HRC (July)
-Walk a Day event (August-September)
-2016 RA attendance

From our email last night, I have connected with Kari in NH regarding the RA and any Sanders activity. She is reaching out to Scott McGilvray to help. I'm meeting with Troy and ISEA next week in Iowa.

3. Alliance for Retired Americans Convention has requested a Senator surrogate to their conference. HRC is unable to attend. A video is not a option. Are we interested in asking a friendly Senator to surrogate? Sanders and Pelosi are confirmed to attend.

4. The UAW has started to engage in a endorsement process and invited HRC to their Executive Board meeting in Detroit August 11-13th. UAW has big 3 bargaining this year, FYI.

5. AFT teletown hall with members regarding 2016 endorsement last night went "very well".

6. Current confirmed attendees to John's home: Trumka, Saunders, J. David Cox (AFGE), Perrone (UFCW), McGarvey (BCTD).

Trade Update:
TPA passed House and the labor campaign has moved to the 14 Democratic Senators that voted for TPA/TAA. Almost all of the 14 said that they would only vote for TPA with TAA. This is the leverage point labor is trying to work. The 14 Democratic Senators met with the White House today and reports Circling back around with everyone for an update. After further discussions here this morning, folks came to two conclusions: First, that we should back off the explicit revolution language because it will get us into a fight we don't want; second, that we need to give her a full argument and a new speech, not a brief insert. We then sketched out the attached outline. I'm going to fill in some of the language with the goal of getting her a more robust document later this afternoon (although still an outline). Could everyone take a look and weigh in now on the direction and argument? And I'll recirculate before sending to her in a couple hours?

Thanks very much.
Dan

Meant to include this in your binder yesterday, per your request. I can have Timmothy print for you in the office today.

Now, I know there's been, for example, a lot of controversy surrounding the proposal to build a pipeline, the Keystone pipeline, that would carry oil from Canadian tar sands down to refineries in the Gulf. And the State Department is going through the final stages of evaluating the proposal. That's how it's always been done. But I do want to be clear: Allowing the Keystone pipeline to be built requires a finding that doing so would be in our nation's interest. And our national interest will be served only if this project does not significantly exacerbate the problem of carbon pollution. (Applause.) The net effects of the pipeline's impact on our climate will be absolutely critical to determining whether this project is allowed to go forward. It's relevant.

I'm glad the board meeting was a fruitful one and we are at a solid consensual framework on donors and the rest. I still think a clearer checklist on donor approval going forward is a good thing to have but we can let the dust settle a bit before embarking on this.

I was obviously excited about your mother's announcement. I had heard John Podesta is here May 11 and if he is doing meetings around this would love to see him and thought you would know the best way to facilitate this. I have not been in touch with him since I was on the CCI advisory board with him.

Many thanks,

Mala

Sorry for paraphrasing as I typed as he talked. Frank Luntz is calling 3-1 or 3-2 by Clinton in all States (Yuge wins) but VT. MA & CO likely Sanders but close and can't call MN or AL. On Repubs Trump wins big: Kasich does ok VT & MA, Cruz wins TX & possibly Ark, Rubio has shot in VA & OKL. Trump landslide huge delegate lead as unlikely Cruz or Rubio gets 20% in most states. Luntz thinks Bloomberg wants to come in because of Trump but stays out due to Clinton landslide- he must decide by Mar 15 due to Tx. Tons of business execs on call showing Bloomberg support & calling him directly . Says Trump will move to upper 30s and can only lose Repub primary if 1 on 1 election but with Rubio staying in til FL & Kasich til Ohio, it is now Trumps. Question in Trump v Clinton- Thinks closer than any national polls thinks because blue collar Dems will go Trump and thus viable in national election (toss up) even though Clinton does much better with all women & minorities. Thinks Senate goes to Dems. Many disagree on his Trump viability call as Trump is change of historic size and Dems will work much harder to win and many Repubs will be sidelined. Others challenge this because in primary Repub GOTV was much better. Many execs saying all out war against Trump will start in DC because of down ticket- he still doesn't see any pathway for alternative. This call had more people on than any before which is a sign that execs are now nervous Trump is real.

Subject:	Intelligence Reform Act
Attachments:	Intelligence Reform Act 8-15-08.doc

When John and Melody met with Josh Bolten recently, there was a discussion about the new requirements to facilitate presidential transitions that were included in the Intelligence Reform Act of 2004. Below (and attached) is a memo that one of our research assistants did on the subject:

TO: Chris Lu
FROM: Blake Roberts
RE: Intelligence Reform Act of 2004 — Impact on Transition

Question presented
How does the Intelligence Reform Act of 2004 affect Transition?

Short Answer
The Intelligence Reform Act of 2004 encourages rapid placement of national security personnel in both Transition and the new Administration and requires immediate transfer of information from current Executive Branch officials to the President-Elect.

The Act:

- Allows each major party candidate, before the election, to request security clearances for prospective transition team members who would need access to classified information to carry out transition responsibilities; and requires the investigating agency to process the requests, to the fullest extent practicable, by the day after the election.
- Encourages the President-Elect to request security clearances for high level national security candidates as soon as possible after the election; and requires the investigating agency to process the requests as soon as possible before the inauguration.
- Encourages the President-Elect to submit high level national security nominees to the Senate before inauguration; and encourages the Senate to confirm or reject the nominees within 30 days.
- Requires executive officials to prepare a detailed written summary of current national security issues and deliver it to the President-Elect as soon as possible after the election.

Discussion

Section 7601 of the Intelligence Reform Act of 2004 "addresses the 9/11 Commission's recommendation to improve the transition between administrations." Cong. Rec. S10008 (Sep. 30, 2004) (Sen. McCain). During the course of their investigation, Commissioners found that "the time of transition is a time of great vulnerability for our country" and that "[n]ational security policy making is too important to be disrupted by transition between administrations or delayed by an overburdened system." Testimony of Commissioner Fred Fielding before the Senate Oversight of Government Management Subcommittee (Sep. 14, 2004). The Commission recommended several reforms so "transitions can work more effectively and allow new officials to assume their responsibilities as soon as possible." The 9-11 Commission Report 422-23, quoted in Cong. Rec. S10008 (Sep. 30, 2004) (Sen. McCain). To implement these recommendations, Senators McCain and Lieberman introduced the text of section 7601 as an amendment; it passed on a voice vote. Cong. Rec. S10007 – 9 (Sep. 30, 2004).

The Act affects four aspects of Transition —

(1) Security clearances for prospective transition team members;
(2) Security clearances for candidates for national security positions in the Administration;
(3) Senate consideration of candidates for high level national security positions.
(4) Transmission of national security information from officials to the President-Elect;

See § 7601, Intelligence Reform Act of 2004, Pub. L. 108-458, 118 Stat. 3857 (Dec. 17, 2004).

1. Security Clearances for Transition Team Members

The statute provides:

> Each major party candidate for President may submit, before the date of the general election, requests for security clearances for prospective transition team members who will have a need for access to classified information to carry out their responsibilities as members of the President-elect's transition team.
> . . . Necessary background investigations and eligibility determinations to permit appropriate prospective transition team members to have access to classified information shall be completed, to the fullest extent practicable, by the day after the date of the general election.

Section 7601(b) (codified at 50 U.S.C. § 435b note).

This provision was recommended by the 9-11 Commission. Report at 422.

The agency implementing this statute may require us to wait until Senator Obama accepts the Democratic nomination to submit requests under this provision. The term "major party candidate for President" could be read to only include persons who have been nominated by their party (who were previously candidates for the party nomination).

The statute does not define "prospective transition team members" or "who will have a need for access," apparently leaving that determination to the candidate. This may allow us to submit requests for a range of personnel whose transition work at least partially intersects with national security.

2. Security Clearances for Administration Candidates

The Act provides:

> (1) The President-elect should submit to the Federal Bureau of Investigation or other appropriate agency . . . the names of candidates for high level national security positions through the level of undersecretary of cabinet departments as soon as possible after the date of the general election[] . . .
> (2) The responsible agency or agencies shall undertake and complete as expeditiously as possible the background investigations necessary to provide appropriate security clearances to the individuals . . . before the date of the inauguration . . . .

Section 7601(a) (codified at 3 U.S.C. § 102 note).

This provision was recommended by the 9-11 Commission. Report at 422. Senator McCain advocated for this provision because having "Defense Department, as well as other national-security-related positions, literally vacant for months and months and months . . . is really not an acceptable situation." Cong. Rec. S10009 (Sep. 30, 2004).

3. Senate Confirmation of Administration Nominees

The Act also contains a Sense of the Senate addressing the confirmation process:

> (1) [T]he President-elect should submit the nominations of candidates for high-level national security positions, through the level of undersecretary of cabinet departments, to the Senate by the . . . inauguration . . . and
> (2) for all such national security nominees received by the date of inauguration, the Senate committees to which these nominations are referred should, to the fullest extent possible, complete their consideration of these nominations, and, if such nominations are reported by the committees, the full Senate should vote to confirm or reject these nominations, within 30 days of their submission.

Section 7601(b).

Instead of this provision, the 9-11 Commission recommended that the Senate "adopt special rules requiring hearings and votes to confirm or reject national security nominees within 30 days of their submission." Report at 422. While the Sense of the Senate statement in the Act is not binding, it may remind participants in the confirmation process of the risks associated with unnecessary delay. It could also be a powerful talking point.

4. Transmission of Information

The Act provides that:

> Activities . . . shall include the preparation of a detailed classified, compartmented summary by the relevant outgoing executive branch officials of specific operational threats to national security; major military or covert operations; and pending decisions on possible uses of military force. This summary shall be provided to the President-elect as soon as possible after the date of the general election[].

Section 7601(a) (codified at 3 U.S.C. § 102 note).

This provision was recommended by the 9-11 Commission, report at 422, after it found that "the [Clinton-Bush] transition process didn't serve well in the briefing and handing over of important national security decisions from one administration to another." Fielding Testimony (Sep. 14, 2004).

Conclusion

The Intelligence Reform Act of 2004 encourages rapid placement of national security personnel in both Transition and the new Administration and requires immediate transfer of information from current Executive Branch officials to the President-Elect. The passages providing for early investigation of Transition and Administration personnel do not rigidly define who is eligible for this treatment.

Three talking points from my standpoint:

--Iowa is where the campaign will be defined. It's where the press will cover the campaign most and where it will draw conclusions about how organized, creative, and connected our operation is.
--She has deep experience in a State Director role and will provide valuable leadership in a high stakes situation. HRC will be investing a lot of time and energy here--it's critical that we have someone steady at the rudder to give her confidence and get her buy in.
--It's important that the campaign have a mix of HRC people, Obama people, and new people. She represents two of those worlds and that's very rare and valuable.

Hillary's Welsh Grandmother Was Linked By Genealogists To The Wrong Parents Of Another Girl In Scranton, PA. "Meandering back another generation, I came to realize that other genealogists who had researched Hillary Clinton's ancestry had attached her Welsh grandmother, Hannah Jones, to the wrong parents (two girls named Hannah Jones were born in Scranton, PA circa 1882-1883 and they latched on to the wrong one). I also discovered that Hugh E. Rodham's parents had eloped. This revelation emerged gradually beginning with an oddly worded wedding announcement in a local paper. When I couldn't find a marriage record in Scranton as anticipated, I scoured newspapers instead and found a snippet in an August 1902 issue stating that the couple had wed in Binghamton, New York a couple of months earlier on Memorial Day. Now I understood why I hadn't found the record, but the choice of Binghamton revealed even more." [Irish America, April-May 2015]

Subject: Question on Clinton comments on her grandparents immigrating here
To: jferguson@hillaryclinton.com , press@hillaryclinton.com

Hey,

I saw Sec. Clinton's comments on immigration at the Capital City Fruit on immigration where she said, "ya know if we go around this room there's a lot of immigrant stories. You know, all my grandparents, ya know, came over here. My grandfather went to work in a mill in Scranton, Pennsylvania..." (video attached on that).

One of my hobbies is doing the ancestry of presidential candidates and from what I can tell only one of her grandparents were born overseas. Her fraternal grandfather Hugh Rodham Sr.

I know she's talked about her grandmother immigrating before at an an event last year (17:50).

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gtBePkrEr3w&list=UUSQoxOTCUydTyTAjcLbmVAQ

"She immigrated with her family as a young girl to Scranton and went to work — very young–in a silk mill, and then she met and married my grandfather, who had also come to this country as a young man from the coalmining area in Newcastle, in England."

Looking at census records it seems only her grandfather was an immigrant. Coming as a two-year-old boy:

You need an ancestry log in for this (I can give you mine if you need it).

While Hannah Rodham is listed as PA born on the 1910, 1920, and 1930 census records:

John -

John McCain is a war hero.

I disagree with him on pretty much every foreign policy related question, but he's a war hero who could have left captivity early and put others lives in front of his own.

But it is somewhat amusing to watch Conservative-types circle the wagons after Donald Trump's attack on his service. Because you know who else is a war hero?

John Kerry is war hero. Yet Conservatives mocked him at the 2004 Republican Convention, wearing Band-Aids with purple hearts on them.

Max Cleland is a war hero. He left three limbs on the battlefield, but Republicans ran ads with him next to pictures of Saddam Hussein and Osama bin Laden.

The message is clear: In the Republican Party, attacking someone's service is a-ok if it's done to win a race. But not on our watch.

Make a $3 contribution to VoteVets today. We're the first line of defense for attacks on progressive veteran candidates in 2016.

Tammy Duckworth is a war hero. But that didn't stop Tea Partiers from saying she was not a "true hero" because she talked about her service.

VoteVets wasn't around for the attacks on Senators Cleland and Kerry, but we were for Tammy's campaign. And in the end, we pummeled Joe Walsh for his attacks and helped to swing a difficult election.

We're prepared to do the same this election, but only if we have your help.

Contribute $3 to VoteVets today.

Thanks for standing with VoteVets, and the full-slate of progressive veterans running in 2016.

When we all stand together, we can't be beat.

Cheryl's feedback was that the last line ("This goes far beyond normal practice, and anything further is simply playing politics") was too much, particularly based on the teachings of the vulnerability meeting today, so I've revised and she asked me to put the question to you all. Revised version below.

"We've turned over all of her work email, and taken the extraordinary step of asking the State Department to release them. When they do, which we hope to be soon, it will offer an unprecedented opportunity for the American people to see it for themselves, and we're confident that it will be clear that it's all there and then some."

Alright here's where I think we should be right now. Can others weigh in so we can start to ship this?

On the record:
We've turned over all of her work email, taken the unprecedented step of asking the State Department to release them, and when they do, which we hope to be soon, we're confident that everyone will see that it's all there and then some, and it will offer an unprecedented opportunity for the American people to see the work that the Department does every day.

This goes far beyond normal practice, and anything further is simply playing politics.

Off the record:
Rep Cummings' statement makes some important points about standards that I hope you'd point out in your reporting.

Hey Nick, I'm writing a story about the formal request Chairman's Gowdy office sent to David Kendall today asking that Sec. Clinton hand over her email server to the State Dept IG or another independent third party. I'd like to know whether the secretary plans to do so and if she has any response to the letter. I'm on deadline now.

I was surprised by the President's comment about Sony making a mistake. I can't imagine being the studio and taking the risk that someone would get hurt in a theater...even if it wasn't a North Korean terrorist, it could be an American nut job opening fire in a theater in Colorado...only this time Sony would be sued for liability because there had been threats. I think they'd be betting the farm. Just my two cents.

No, no lecture. I'd call it more of a plea. Practically begging. We are all juggling a lot. I don't know about you guys, but I'm barely staying on top of my email. It helps if people use the subject header in the way the Good Lord intended them to be used: to convey the subject. It's not like we're pleading for something extraordinary, like the subject header expressed in Hieroglyphics. We're asking for a modicum of connection between the subject header of the email and the actual subject of the email. Clear and concise subject headers don't ever confuse people. Nobody ever recoils from a clear subject header. But when they are not, it's hard to keep track. The below is a case in point.

[Brynne, this isn't directed at you, you are just stepping into a very divisive ongoing debate about email etiquette, including subject header abuse, that has come down largely along gender lines.]

Race looks wide open in 13th Congressional District

By Jessica Parks, Inquirer Staff Writer
POSTED: April 29, 2014

Marjorie Margolies can't tap her general election funds

What was once viewed as a slam-dunk comeback for former U.S. Rep. Marjorie Margolies is turning into a knock-down, drag-out brawl with her three opponents in the 13th Congressional District, political observers say.

Margolies had been considered the front-runner in the race to replace Allyson Schwartz. A poll her campaign commissioned in August found 62 percent of likely Democratic primary voters recognized her, and 55 percent viewed her favorably.

But that early advantage has failed to push her opponents - State Rep. Brendan Boyle, physician Valerie Arkoosh, and State Sen. Daylin Leach - from contention. Each has built niches of support, with endorsements and money matching or exceeding Margolies'.

"I can give you a winning scenario for every one of those candidates," said Larry Ceisler, a political consultant who has ties to all four candidates but who said he wasn't backing one over the others. "As we get closer, it's going to tighten up even more," he said.

The candidates are scheduled to debate at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the Philadelphia Portuguese Club, 2019 Rhawn St.

Over the last six months, Margolies' fund-raising has not kept up with her spending, and she has been battered by negative reports about her charity, her ex-husband's financial crimes, and her campaign's reliance on the Clintons (Chelsea Clinton is her daughter-in-law).

Last week, that criticism was amplified when Leach filed a complaint with the Federal Election Commission, alleging that Margolies misused money designated for the general election.

Six months ago, "I would have said [Margolies] is a 2-to-1 or 3-to-1 favorite," said Neil Oxman, a Democratic consultant who is not affiliated with the race. "Given what's happened with her finances, I think she's no longer the front-runner."

Margolies' campaign has denied breaking any finance laws. Her campaign manager, Ken Smukler, said internal polling indicated that she still had a strong lead in the race.

But with three weeks until the May 20 primary, independent observers said it was anyone's game.

"Each of the four candidates really has a strong argument that they're best equipped to win the primary," said Mark Nevins, a consultant with Dover Strategy Group who said he was "officially agnostic" on the race. He said the result would come down to "who has the most compelling message and the resources to get that message out on TV and by mail aggressively."

Leach and Boyle are running TV ads, and Arkoosh has independent radio ads and direct mail going out.

Margolies' campaign on Monday will open a Northeast Philadelphia office. But as of late March, it had spent no money on advertising or direct voter outreach, according to FEC reports. Her first TV ad is set to air this week.

Geography vs. gender

The nominee will square off in the fall against the winner of the GOP race between retired U.S. Air Force Col. Beverly Plosa-Bowser and businessman Carson "Dee" Adcock.

Any Democrat is likely to have the advantage. The 13th District is reliably Democratic - roughly 60 percent - and the population is split evenly between Northeast Philadelphia and southern Montgomery County.

Margolies, Leach, and Arkoosh hail from Montgomery County - which could give Boyle an edge.

Oxman, a consultant with the Campaign Group in Philadelphia who isn't supporting any candidate, likes Boyle's odds.

He and others praised Boyle's ground game and said his support among trade unions and Philadelphia ward leaders would pay off on Election Day.

Boyle is "certainly going to win the city," Oxman said. "The question is, will he win the city by a large enough margin that whoever wins the suburbs will not matter?"

Ceisler and Nevins agreed the suburban split could be a deciding factor in Boyle's favor.

Margolies and Arkoosh have been campaigning hard on the importance of electing a woman to replace Schwartz, currently the only woman in Pennsylvania's congressional delegation.

Margolies has spent 20 years leading a charity that promotes women's leadership, and she casts herself as the leading proponent for women.

Arkoosh, who lobbied around the country for the Affordable Care Act and its women's health provisions, in the spring received a high-profile endorsement from the Women's Campaign Fund. Last week, the Women's Campaign Fund named Arkoosh one of its 40 "game changers" in U.S. politics.

Emily's List, a leading national women's political group, has yet to issue an endorsement in the 13th District.

Nevins said gender could sway some voters and noted that women tend to vote in "slightly larger numbers in elections like this." But because there are two women in the race, he said, "I'm not sure there's an obvious winner."

Going negative

Last week, the campaign took a negative turn when Leach accused Margolies of deliberately misusing campaign money.

Margolies' campaign has denied the allegations and hired a former FEC commissioner to represent her in the case.

The candidates have also turned up the heat to highlight their few policy differences.

Arkoosh has been attacking Margolies' 1994 plan to cut Social Security benefits and raise the retirement age. "Marjorie Margolies tried to slash our Social Security benefits," one of her campaign mailers declared.

In an e-mail Friday, Margolies called those mailers "intellectually dishonest" and has said she does not agree to benefit cuts or raising the retirement age.

"My opponents continue to attempt to scare seniors by citing positions I took over two decades ago as though they are current," Margolies wrote.

She has criticized Leach for supporting positions she says are politically untenable, among them legalizing marijuana and shifting to a single-payer health-care system.

Leach, Arkoosh, and Margolies have criticized Boyle for voting to tighten regulations on abortion providers. Five of the state's 22 clinics closed after the bill passed.

Boyle said he supported women's right to choose but defended the vote.

"I think it's a reasonable step to say there need to be reasonable health requirements and inspections," he said Friday.

Thank you all for confirming 2pm tomorrow. Brynne will send a race backgrounder shortly so you have relevant information.
Margolies has a poll going in to field tonight so I though we could delay the call until we had some numbers. However, nick/pir report that the NYT (Amy Chozick) is about to write a story and is specifically asking if Clintons plan to provide additional help and her story may run soon.
Do people have ability to call in earlier?
8:30am? Sorry to do this at such short notice. I know cdm is overseas so might not be easy to do.

We were hoping to avoid getting involved but now that it is less than a month out, and her campaign is not doing as well as she had hoped, we are getting increasing pressure to help.

CDM is in Africa so will try to keep this efficient but ideally we can touch on the 2014 plan for the fall as well.

Thank you so much for agreeing to appear as a Special Guest at our labor dinner tomorrow night!

Attached is a briefing that provides an attendee list, schedule, and talking points.

I did want to note that there are two issues that are somewhat contentious that typically come up at these events with labor: first, the Keystone Pipeline. Second, Obamacare's treatment of health care plans that trade unions utilize. I wouldn't be surprised if you get a question or two on those issues.

Let me know if there's anything else you need - also, if you can tell me what time you anticipate arriving that would be great.

You are undoubtedly completely on top of this but my friends in the African American community tell me that getting Jim Clyburn's endorsement is extremely important, particularly in South Carolina. We lost it to Obama and it hurt.

Given the announcement that Clyburn will make up his mind who to support shortly I am guessing that Vernon Jordan and Maxine Waters are all over this but I know both well and can call. Up to you.

John --

If you're planning on donating to this campaign at any point in the next 16 months, you should do it now.

Tonight at midnight is not just your last chance to enter the "Dinner with Barack and Joe" contest, it's also a hugely important fundraising deadline for this campaign -- the first time we'll report on our progress to the public and the press.

The next few hours are critical for us. Please donate $5 or more today:

https://donate.barackobama.com/Dinner

Come next fall, people might not remember this date -- or make the connection between the strength of our campaign then and the steps we took in these early months. But anyone worth their salt in politics knows tonight is one of the most important tests we'll face as a campaign this year. Let's hit it out of the park.

Thanks,

Messina

Subject:	John, this is important!

President Obama did what the House GOP was too afraid to do: He took steps to reform our broken immigration system. Instead of rising to the challenge and passing immigration reform, the GOP is trying to figure out how to attack the president over his action. We can't let that happen. We need action and we need it now.

Can you add your name and tell the GOP to pass immigration reform NOW?

NAME: John Podesta

ADD YOUR NAME

John--

Within days of the president's bold action to help reform our broken immigration system, the GOP officially filed suit against the president.

The GOP would rather play political games and grandstand rather than let the House vote on a comprehensive immigration bill. That isn't ok. We need you to step up now and demand that the GOP let the House vote on immigration reform.

URGENT ACTION: Click here to add your name and demand the GOP let the House vote >>>

The majority of Americans want to see action on this issue but Republicans have allowed amnesty by trying to skirt the issue. We need to stand with the president and work together to create a solution that works for everyone. But we can't do that with one party refusing to have the conversation.

Help us demand that Congress take action on immigration. Add your name to stand with President Obama.

This is a fight worth having, and one that we can and WILL win.

Hi John,

Happy New Year! I hope this finds you well and that you had a bit of time off to enjoy the holidays.

I wanted to let you know that I received an offer from Google and will be starting a job in their policy department later this month. Thank you so much for your help with this process! I am very excited about this opportunity and can't wait to learn more about Google's work and its policy initiatives.

Let me know if you are ever out here in the Bay Area. There is actually a sizeable group of ex-CAPers at Google and it would be great to bring you on campus and show you around.

Again, thanks so much for your help!

Best,

Teresita

Subject:	[big campaign] Watchdog Group Files FEC Complaint on McCain, Launches New TV Ad On McCain-Lobbyist Airbus Deal

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Watchdog Group Files FEC Complaint on McCain, Launches New TV Ad On McCain-Lobbyist Airbus Deal

Washington, DC – Campaign Money Watch, a nonpartisan campaign finance watchdog group, announced today it has filed a complaint with the Federal Election Commission concerning Sen. John McCain's (R-AZ) presidential campaign, asking the commission to investigate two issues related to Tom Loeffler, Susan Nelson, and Rick Davis, the lobbyists that run and have fundraised for McCain's White House bid.

The organization also began running a television ad regarding John McCain's intervention in an Air Force contract worth up to $100 billion that was awarded to Airbus, its parent company, and partners. Seven lobbyists aiding John McCain's campaign worked for Airbus' American affiliate, and McCain received more in campaign contributions from them than any other politician.

The ad can be watched at http://www.campaignmoney.org/mccainairbus and the complaint can be read in its entirety at http://www.campaignmoney.org/mccainfec.

"Both the complaint and the ad go to the heart of one of the most troubling aspects of McCain's campaign – his symbiotic relationship with powerful Washington big money lobbyists and fundraisers," said Campaign Money Watch director David Donnelly. "John McCain has refused to answer questions regarding excess contributions, illegal corporate donation, or both. By filing this complaint, we will force him to end his stonewalling on these matters. By running this ad, we will force a debate on his relationship with lobbyists and fundraisers on his campaign.

"The FEC complaint is directly connected to the ad: The same lobbyists that aided Airbus are at the center of activity that we have reason to believe violated federal election law," Donnelly continued.

The first part of the complaint asks the FEC to investigate whether McCain's national finance director, lobbyist Susan Nelson, received illegal compensation from The Loeffler Group, a lobbying firm founded by Tom Loeffler, who resigned in May as McCain's national finance co-chair. The money Nelson received from the firm was ostensibly for work for the lobbying firm's clients, though records do not indicate any recent lobbying work by Nelson. The McCain campaign has refused to explain what services Nelson provided for Loeffler's clients.

The second part of the complaint concerns a possible illegal corporate donation from 3eDC, a private Web company partly owned by campaign manager and lobbyist Rick Davis. Before Davis became campaign manager, the campaign incurred more than $1 million worth of bills from 3eDC. Soon after Davis assumed the reins of the campaign, however, that bill was reduced by $107,475 without documentation. There is reason to believe that the company made an illegal corporate contribution to the campaign.

McCain's cozy relationship with lobbyists is also the subject of the ad that is on the air today in the Washington, D.C., market and released online to the group's 150,000 email subscribers. The spot draws attention to a defense contract awarded to Airbus and its parent company EADS and partners, over Boeing. McCain's intervention helped Airbus land the contract, worth up to $100 billion. Seven Airbus lobbyists are top fundraisers or staff members for McCain's presidential campaign. McCain also has received more in political contributions from Airbus than any other politician.

"Sen. McCain's intervention to help Airbus land this contract raises important questions about the influence lobbyists and political contributions have on his decision-making and whether he can provide the change America needs," Donnelly said.

Campaign Money Watch, a project of the nonpartisan Public Campaign Action Fund, works to hold politicians accountable for opposing comprehensive campaign reform, and for doing favors for big money donors and lobbyists. In mid-May, Campaign Money Watch launched FiretheLobbyists.com to call on Sen. McCain to remove lobbyists from his campaign team.

All -- Nick and I updated the factsheet/Q&A for the website. See attached.

I copy and pasted new/expanded questions below for ease. All else mirrors what's currently on the website (https://www.hillaryclinton.com/p/briefing/factsheets/2015/07/13/email-facts/) -- with some minor tweaks, such as we now have over 1250 emails deemed personal records and adding in more "As she said before.."

Let me know your thoughts…

Thx

New/Expanded Q's

Clinton said she did not use her email to send or receive classified information, but the State Department and two Inspectors General said some of these emails do contain classified information. Was her statement inaccurate?

No information in Clinton's emails was marked classified at the time she sent or received them. Clinton only used her account for unclassified email.

When information is reviewed for public release, it is common for information previously unclassified to be upgraded to classified if the State Department or another agency believes its public release could cause potential harm to national security, law enforcement or diplomatic relations.

After reviewing a sampling of the 55,000 pages of emails, the Inspectors General have proffered that four emails, which did not contain any classified markings and/or dissemination controls, should have been classified at the time they were sent. The State Department has said it disagrees with this assessment.

Clinton hopes the State Department and other relevant agencies will sort out as quickly as possible which of the 55,000 pages of emails are appropriate to release to the public.

Is Department of Justice conducting a criminal inquiry into Clinton's email use?

No. As the Department of Justice and Inspectors General made clear, the IG's made a security referral. This was not criminal in nature as misreported by some in the press. The Department of Justice is now seeking assurances about the storage of materials related to Clinton's email account.

Is it true that her email server and a thumb drive were recently turned over the government. Why?

Again, when information is reviewed for public release, it is common for information previously unclassified to be upgraded to classified if the State Department or another agency believes its public release could cause potential harm to national security, law enforcement or diplomatic relations.

It is her hope that State and the other agencies involved in the review process will sort out as quickly as possible which emails are appropriate to release to the public, and that the release will be as timely and as transparent as possible.

In the meantime, her team has worked with the State Department to ensure her emails are stored in a safe and secure manner.

As a result, she directed her team to give her email server to the Department of Justice, as well as a thumb drive containing copies of her emails already provided to the State Department. We have pledged to cooperate with the government's security inquiry—if it decides it needs to see more, we will arrange for that to happen.

Would this issue not have arisen if she used a state.gov email address?

Even if Clinton's emails had been on a government email address and government device, these questions would be raised prior to public release.

While State Department's review of her 55,000 emails brought the issue to the Inspectors Generals' attentions, the emails that were classified prior to public release were on the unclassified .gov email system. They were not on the separate, closed system used by State Department for handling classified communications.

Only decision was to definitely go forward with the VoteVets spots with our woman veteran and her baby and the Fatigues kids spot. Other decisions yea or nay haven't been made yet. I agree on Laugh and Laugh is only $6000 per spot so I will get those going.

I'm thinking for the expensive Romney and McCain spots we wait until after Florida tonight to pull the trigger. So, we focus on getting today's scripts in good shape.

I'm trying to get more McCain and Romney "economy" scripts. Might not be doable for next week.

Also, McCain "Bomb bomb bomb" spots which could be updated with his recent promise of "more wars." Please do look into "laugh". We all gave it high marks. Romney economy spot is good idea too, Tara. Again, apologies if all this decided already.

John --

Sometimes, making policy is a little bit like sailing -- even after you point the tiller in the right direction, it takes a moment before the boat actually starts to travel that course.

But with President Obama at the helm, America is not only on the right course, John -- we're moving forward again, full speed ahead. Our unemployment rate, once at 10 percent, has been cut in half. Our private sector, once losing 800,000 jobs a month, has now added jobs for six consecutive years -- more than 14 million in total.

This is proof positive that America is currently on the right path. But a Donald Trump (or whoever the Republicans nominate) in the White House next year would undo all these years of steady progress, and turn us back in the wrong direction. We simply cannot let that happen.

So, if you're ready to elect a Democrat to the White House who will protect our progress, pitch in $3 or more today.

Subject: Scarborough says Algeria donated to Clinton Foundation when it wanted off 'terror list' | PunditFact

Scarborough's claim rates False.

Scarborough says Algeria donated to Clinton Foundation when it wanted off 'terror list'

Television pundits are raising a lot of questions about foreign government donations to the Clinton Foundation during Hillary Clinton's tenure as secretary of state.

But not everyone get all the details right. Joe Scarborough of MSNBC's Morning Joe flubbed describing the situation in the April 27 show.

He was discussing a column by the Washington Post's Ruth Marcus, whose op-ed highlighted an unreported donation to Bill Clinton's foundation by Algeria in 2010 as an example of sloppiness. The donation, and others like it, raises questions about whether Clinton went "soft" on Algeria for contributing to her husband's cause under the appearance of earthquake relief in Haiti, Marcus wrote.

Scarborough said the situation will "stink to high heaven" even if it's a legal gray area.

"I think it was Algeria, maybe, that had given a donation that went unreported at a time when they wanted to be taken off of the terror list in the State Department," Scarborough said. "They write the check, they get taken off the terror list. ... At the same time, and then it goes unreported by the Clinton Foundation."

"Is there a quid pro quo there? I don't know, that's really hard to tell," he said.

Scarborough went on to break down to his panelists how easy it would be to explain to voters what might have occurred.

"This is pretty simple stuff. So Algeria is on the terror list, they want off the terror list, the State Department's making a decision to do it, they write a check for what? How much? How many million dollars do they write a check for? I don't know, but Algeria writes a check. You're from Boston, you know how politics works. They write a really big check to the Clinton Foundation," Scarborough said. "The Clinton Foundation takes the check, and then just, out of nowhere the State Department then decides, well, they are going to take Algeria off the list. Now why did Algeria write a big check to the Clinton Foundation at the time they want something from the State Department? That's pretty simple for most voters."

The problem with all of this isn't the donation, or questions about a quid pro quo with Algeria. It's the fact that Algeria wasn't ever on the terror list. (Media Matters first pointed out what Scarborough said.)

An ally against terror

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The list Scarborough mentions is a serious designation given to just four countries the State Department considers state sponsors of terrorism : Syria, Iran, Sudan and Cuba. President Barack Obama is poised to remove Cuba from the list as a show of improved diplomatic relations. (Libya, Iraq and North Korea are the only countries that have been removed.)

Algeria is actually a key partner of the United States in fighting terrorism in North Africa and "has a long history of fighting terrorism," the State Department says .

The country spent about 20 years locked in a civil war between the military and various Islamist groups after an Islamist group won a 1991 election that was scrapped. The country's president, Abdelaziz Bouteflika, lifted a state of emergency in April 2011.

But the country continues to struggle with radical violence in neighboring countries. Algeria was attacked by the group that calls itself al-Qaida in the Lands of the Islamic Maghreb almost 200 times in just 2013 in the form of improvised explosive devices, bombings, kidnappings, and fake roadblocks.

Human rights violations hamper relations

The Algerian government is not a state sponsor of terror. But its hands are not clean when it comes to human rights, which is most likely what Scarborough was trying to recall on air.

The Washington Post story that revealed the Algerian embassy's donation of $500,000 also mention that the one-time gift coincided with increased lobbying visits to the State Department about human rights violations.

In 2010, Algeria spent more than $420,000 lobbying American officials on inter-country relations and on "human rights issues," the Post found, citing documents filed as part of the Foreign Agents Registration Act. The year also saw an increase in meetings between State Department officials and lobbyists representing Algeria, growing from "a handful" of recorded visits in the years before and after to 12 visits in 2010, the Post reported.

The Algeria donation came soon after the Jan. 12, 2010, earthquake in Haiti, the Clinton Foundation said. It was unsolicited and went to the Clinton Foundation Haiti Relief Fund, "where the entire amount of Algeria's contribution was distributed as aid in Haiti." Algeria had not donated before and has not donated since, a foundation spokesman said.

The foundation acknowledged it did not alert the State Department about the gift for vetting, which was required under a memorandum of understanding between the Obama administration and the Clintons in an effort to prevent foreign governments from trying to curry favor with Hillary Clinton's State Department by donating to Bill Clinton's philanthropy.

So what are the human rights issues Algeria was lobbying on?

Reports by Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International and the State Department outline the activities of a strict authoritarian government that represses its people's freedom of assembly and association, overuses pretrial detentions, and employs a judicial system that is susceptible to corruption.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The State Department's 2010 report of human rights issues in Algeria highlights more issues including reports of arbitrary killings, the government failing to account for people who disappeared during the civil war in the 1990s, violence and discrimination against women, and continued restrictions for workers' rights.

The government of Algeria has resisted inspections by independent human rights groups.

MSNBC's Diana Rocco said Scarborough deserves some credit for indicating he "wasn't sure it was" Algeria, and that the exchange that followed "clearly shows he's using it as a hypothetical scenario to make his larger point about how the quid pro quo scenario may have unfolded."

None of that, though, means that Algeria was on the terror watch list in the first place.

Neither Algeria nor other governments revealed to have given to the foundation — Australia, the Dominican Republic, Kuwait, Norway, Oman and Qatar — are sponsors of terrorism, either.

Our ruling

Scarborough was trying to recall the details of a news story about Clinton Foundation donations from foreign governments when he brought up Algeria's donation to the foundation to try getting off the "terror list."

There are parts about the donations that may not look good for Clinton. Maybe it becomes a legal problem, maybe it's just a political one. But to claim the foundation took donations from a country on the terrorist list is inaccurate.

Scarborough's claim rates False.

Hillary Clinton Doesn't Need Liberals; The numbers show black voters defeated her in 2008 and will make her win in 2016.
By Jamelle Bouie
Slate
Tue, Jul 1, 2014

Somehow, six years after a divisive, bitter primary against a liberal challenger, Hillary Clinton has become the darling of the Democratic left. To liberal Democrats, she's more "tough," "honest," and exciting than any figure in the party. As Noam Scheiber writes in an excellent feature on Clinton and the left for the New Republic, "it's a striking turnaround for a candidate who, when her opponent famously proclaimed her 'likeable enough' in 2008, discovered that less than half her party agreed.

For Scheiber—who pegs the change to partisan solidarity—liberal support is key to Clinton's presidential ambitions, if she runs. Without dissatisfied liberals to fuel an anti-Clinton insurgency, he argues, the former secretary of state has an easy path to the nomination, even with her liabilities on income inequality and her close relationship to Wall Street and other titans of the 1 percent. "What's so unusual about Clinton's standing is that, unlike 2008, it's almost certain to hold up even against a perfectly positioned challenger—say, Elizabeth Warren, the most beloved economic populist in the country," writes Scheiber.

At the risk of nitpicking, I think it's wrong to call Warren "perfectly positioned." Not because she isn't talented and popular, but because liberals—or at least, self-identified liberals—aren't enough to win a Democratic primary.

Key to Scheiber's case is the idea that liberals killed the Clinton candidacy of 2008 and could do the same in 2016 if they backed Warren or another credible challenger. But while liberals were a necessary part of the Obama insurgency, they weren't sufficient to stop the Clinton machine. To wit, self-identified liberals were just 39 percent of all Democrats in 2008, followed by moderates (38 percent) and conservatives (21 percent). Or you could just look at Clinton's record in the primary, where liberal opposition couldn't block her victories in New Hampshire, California, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, Massachusetts, and Arizona.

Clinton's problem had less to do with liberals and more with African-Americans, who formed a critical share of the Democratic primary electorate. Scheiber points to this in a footnote, but it's worth a full take. Put simply, a Democratic presidential candidate can't win the primary without substantial support from black voters, who tend to vote for the establishment choice. Accordingly, it's when African-Americans back a challenger that the establishment candidate falters, which is to say that if Hillary Clinton had kept a decent share of the black vote, she would have become the Democratic nominee, regardless of liberal disdain for her candidacy.

Hillary Clinton's strength comes from her position with black voters.

To see this, you just have to look at the numbers. As the year wore on, Barack Obama was winning black electorates by huge margins of 8– or 9–to–1 in delegate-rich states like Virginia, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Ohio, and Georgia. In states where Clinton was weak, like Illinois, this gave Obama a huge victory outright, with an abundance of votes and delegates heading to the convention. And in states where she was strong, like Pennsylvania, this allowed Obama to play a close game and win a respectable number of votes. As political scientist Tom Schaller noted toward the end of the primary season, "Clinton squeezed out the same number of net delegates from her 17-point win in New York and 9-point win in Pennsylvania as Obama did in his 31-point win in Illinois—even though New York and Pennsylvania combined … awarded nearly two and half times the delegates that Illinois did." And while a modest increase in Clinton's black support—from 10 or 15 percent to 20 or 25 percent—may not have been sufficient to win her a delegate lead, as Schaller later points out, it could have swung the popular vote in her favor.

I can imagine the objection. Obama was viable and black. Clinton didn't stand a chance with African-Americans. But that's a bit of revisionist history. Remember, for all of 2007, Clinton held the lead with African-American voters. In one August poll by the Pew Research Center, 94 percent of black Democrats held a favorable view of Clinton, compared with 88 percent for Obama. In the same poll, and 47 percent supported her candidacy, compared with 34 percent for Obama. Likewise, an October CNN poll found that Clinton was supported by 57 percent of African-American Democrats, versus 33 percent for Obama. And toward the end of the year, Clinton continued to hold a favorability advantage, with favorable ratings from 83 percent of blacks, versus 74 percent for Obama.

Obama's huge black support only came after his first place finish in the Iowa caucuses in January 2008, where he proved himself a strong candidate with broad appeal. And once it did, he quickly became a credible candidate in a way that escaped similar liberal challengers, like Howard Dean in 2004 or Bill Bradley in 2000, who couldn't build the same foothold. What's more, he was helped along by the Clinton campaign's missteps with black voters—from Bill's "fairy tale" description of Obama's chances to her argument that she was a better candidate to win "hard-working Americans, white Americans."

Absent Clinton's tactical and rhetorical mistakes, she could have held on to a substantial chunk of the black vote, denying Obama the lopsided margins he needed to win—even if he held the majority of liberal support.

Which brings us back to the present. Yes, Hillary Clinton benefits from her new popularity with liberals, but her strength comes from her position with black voters, who seem committed to a Clinton candidacy. And as long as that's true, Hillary Clinton can't lose the 2016 Democratic primary, period.

So, if you're among the people pushing Elizabeth Warren to run for the nomination, here's a suggestion to pass along. If Sen. Warren is interested and wants a chance to win, she should spend a bit less time in Oregon and West Virginia, and a lot more in South Carolina.

Todd et al.,

I'm writing to ask where we stand with respect to working through the national securities law and civil liberties law concerning the topics above. I believe we agreed that some cross-talk between the National Security team and the DOJ/Domestic team is required, but I don't recall getting to closure on which individuals have the lead.

The exchange I had with Susan Rice at the last Board meeting is illustrative of the difficulty. There can be an inherent tension between the national security perspective and the Rule of Law perspective. As we know, this played out in the Bush Administration rather tragically, and the vast majority of legal observers believe that the DOJ participants acted in a manner that -- at a minimum -- violated fundamental ethical and professional principles, if not the Law. As a formal matter, whatever course of policy and action the Obama Administration adopts on these issues, clearance by OLC and the Attorney General will be required, as well as review by White House Counsel.

So, I believe the Transition should likewise get the right set of perspectives around a table sooner rather than later.

There is another, related issue that deserves some attention: The role of OLC in relation to the State Department Legal Adviser (L). The Bush Administration broke with precedent by shifting more authority to OLC for definitive resolution of questions of international law and treaty interpretation. L was consulted, but the formal lead rested with OLC. Earlier administrations allowed the State Department to have the lead. What will be the practice in the Obama Administration? There are arguments in both directions. It would be good to get this resolved before the appointees are selected.

I am interested in these issues, having taught National Security Law. But I know there are several terrific lawyers who could contribute a lot: Eric Holder, Jamie Gorelick, Larry Tribe, Cass Sunstein, Alex Aleinikoff.

MADDOW: "Blatantly illegal" voter suppression

John --

Seven-hour Election Day lines could be coming to North Carolina thanks to a new Republican voting law, and Rachel Maddow has identified where Republicans are going furthest to prevent Democrats from voting:

Watch the report above to see just how extreme Republican-backed voting restrictions have become in North Carolina, and then please consider donating to help fight these tactics across the country.

Republicans in nearly three-dozen states are pursuing these tactics, but this North Carolina law is being called the most extreme voting law since the 1965 Voting Rights Act was passed.

It is wrong and un-American for politicians to cling to power by blocking eligible voters from voting. Please watch Rachel Maddow's report and then consider donating to fight these extreme tactics.

> There was a story in yesterday's Washington Post about Podesta and other Hillary staff required to take cheap interstate buses to get to DC. Those buses are actually a big negative issue in many Manhattan districts, as Port Authority is overcapacity and they must pick up and drop off on already overcrowded city streets. This issue drives us, and the NYC Dept of Transportation, crazy. I sent the article to the Borough Commissioner, suggesting that perhaps President Hillary Clinton will provide the funds to build a badly needed new Port Authority facility. The situation is so bad, and the cost of building a new facility in Manhattan is so great, that people are talking about moving the terminal to New Jersey. BTW, when the current terminal was conceived and created in the late 1940's, the number of buses on the street needing a terminal was actually less than the number of buses on the street now, due to the overcapacity of the current terminal. And there is absolutely NO political leadership on either the city or state level focusing on this problem or our other transportation disasters-waiting-to-happen (Penn Station, the one hundred year old tunnels between NJ and NY, etc).

Coalition Calls on Governors to Free State Employees to Assist on Election Day Unprecedented Turnout Requires Unprecedented Response

As unease increases about possible chaos at the polls next Tuesday, a coalition of labor, environmental, civil rights and consumer organizations has called on the fifty state governors to free non-essential personnel to provide much-needed assistance. In a letter sent by Change to Win, Sierra Club, Public Citizen, People for the American Way, National Partnership for Women and Families, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and others, the coalition urges that public employees be released for training on Monday and then to aid poll workers on Election Day.

"Every voter being able to cast a vote and having that vote count is the foundation of democracy....Voting is a fundamental right..." the letter says. While since the 2000 Florida debacle, election officials across the country have tried to plan for increased turnout, there are already serious indications in the early voting that they may not be up to the task.

"Lines in Ohio seem to reach Indiana" said Change to Win head Anna Berger. "Citizens are being forced to wait several hours just to exercise what is their most basic right as Americans."

"It would be especially scandalous if just as tens of millions of Americans reengaged with our democracy, the system shut them out," said Sierra Club Executive Director Carl Pope. "It has now fallen upon the nation's governors to insure that this does not occur on their watch."

According to the letter, releasing public employees could double the number of check-in tables and cut waiting time at least in half. Government employees deal with the public every day and are better suited than most to act as precinct workers, under the supervision of precinct captains and others. While government office may be understaffed for a day or two, "there is nothing more important than the right to vote" says the letter.

"It is what separates the United States from so many authoritarian governments throughout the world" said Norman Lear of people for the American Way "If we can hold orderly elections in Iraq., we can certainly hold them here at home."

Sen. Clinton's Campaign:

CLINTON NOT YET READY TO CONCEDE. The AP (6/4) reports, "Angling for a vice presidential nod," Sen. Hillary Clinton "refused to bow out of the Democratic race Tuesday, hoping to maintain leverage as Barack Obama clinched the delegates needed to secure the party's nomination. 'A lot of people are asking, 'What does Hillary want?" Clinton told supporters at a rally in New York. 'I want what I have always fought for: I want the nearly 18 million people who voted for me to be respected and heard.' Clinton told the crowd she would consult in the coming days with advisers about the fate of her moribund candidacy. But her remarks came hours after she told congressional colleagues she would be open to joining Obama as his running mate."

The Washington Post (6/4, A1, Kornblut, 723K) reports in a front page story that, "Characteristically measured and noticeably upbeat, Clinton did not explain her next move when she addressed her supporters in the dingy basement gym at Baruch College. If her speech seemed a valedictory, she did not say she was ending her campaign. If she lavishly praised Barack Obama -- who 'inspired so many Americans to care about politics and empowered so many more to get involved' -- she did not endorse him."

In a story headlined "Hillary Clinton's determined White House bid is at last truly over," the Los Angeles Times (6/4, Levey, 833K) reports Clinton "seemed unable to abandon her argument that she should have had the prize. 'In the millions of quiet moments, in thousands of places,' she told her fans, 'you asked yourself a simple question: Who would be the strongest candidate and the strongest president?' Clinton provided the answer. She ticked off the states she had won -- including South Dakota on Tuesday night -- and reiterated her much-disputed claim to have been the choice of more voters."

NBC Nightly News (6/3, story 2, 2:45, Mitchell, 9.87M) reported, "When will she actually concede that is still undecided but she will concede." Terry McAuliffe, Clinton campaign chairman, was shown speaking earlier in the day on NBC's Today Show saying, "I think if Senator Obama gets the number, I think Hillary Clinton will congratulate him and call him the nominee."

CLINTON "OPEN" TO ACCEPTING VP NOMINATION. Speaking on a conference call with legislators from her home state of New York yesterday, Hillary Clinton reportedly expressed interest in joining Barack Obama on the Democratic ticket as his vice presidential running mate. Later in the day, at Baruch College, Clinton told supporters she was not yet prepared to exit the presidential race, saying she needed time to consider her options. The AP (6/4, Fouhy, Barrett) reports Hillary Clinton "told colleagues Tuesday she would consider joining Barack Obama as his running mate, and advisers said she was withholding a formal departure from the race partly to use her remaining leverage to press for a spot on the ticket." On the conference call, Clinton "said she was willing to become Obama's vice presidential nominee if it would help Democrats win the White House, according to several participants in the call." Clinton also "told colleagues the delegate math was not there for her to overtake Obama, but that she wanted to take time to determine how to leave the race in a way that would best help Democrats."

On The Politico (6/4), Ben Smith says, "Greg Sargent has a statement from the campaign: 'Today on a conference call with New York legislators, Sen. Clinton was asked whether she was open to the idea of running as Vice President and repeated what has said before: she would do whatever she could to ensure that Democrats take the White House back and defeat John McCain.'" Smith adds, "This is worth keeping in perspective: What I reported, and what my sources on the call have told me is that, pressed on the vice presidency, Clinton had been open to it."

ABC World News (6/3, lead story, 3:00, Tapper, 8.78M) reported, "Clinton seemed to suggest she would consider being Obama's vice presidential candidate. But people close to Clinton say that right now she's feeling tremendous pressure. And she needs to be given her space in order to make her decision."

The CBS Evening News (6/3, story 2, 2:20, Axelrod, 7.66M) reported, "Formally ending her run may not come for a few days. But she is signaling interest in the vice president slot on the ticket. Asked by fellow New York lawmakers about it today, Clinton said, quote, I'm open to it." McAuliffe: "I think people have to realize that these two candidates received close to 37 million votes. No matter how we go forward, we have to win this White House back. The two of them have to be together in some capacity."

On ABC World News (6/3, story 2, 2:05, Gibson, 8.78M), George Stephanopoulos said, "Now that she says she's open to considering it, a lot of her supporters want it, that puts Barack Obama in a bit of a box. He either has to pick her. He certainly has to seriously consider her. And if he doesn't want her, he has got to do it in a way that doesn't diss her or her supporters."

On the CBS Evening News (6/3, story 3, 3:05, Couric, 7.66M), Bob Schieffer said, "I am told, Katie, that Senator Clinton's husband is the one who is mainly pushing this, telling her she needs to try to get on the ticket. Certainly there will be some pluses and minuses. A plus is obvious. She can help him bring women to support him, she can help him with blue-collar workers. But there are some minuses. And the main minus is Bill Clinton himself. Does Obama want to bring on the questions that will be asked about his personal life, how he made all the money he's made in recent years?"

Clinton Seen As Withholding Concession To Maximize Leverage. In an analysis for the AP (6/4), Ron Fournier addresses the question, voiced by pundits and observers, and by Clinton herself: "What does Hillary want?" Fournier lists the following answers: "The vice presidency. ... A prime-time speaking role at the Democratic National Convention. ... campaign donations to forgive her debt. And she will press her case for relevancy at the risk of widening the divide between Barack Obama's supporters and her older, whiter, working-class coalition." Moreover, "What Clinton told supporters she wanted was an end to the war in Iraq, universal health care and a stronger economy. That certainly is true, but she's also looking out for her own interests. Clinton did not bow out Tuesday because she wants to retain her political leverage, advisers said privately, eying a spot on the ticket, a convention role and perhaps other benefits."

OBAMA, CLINTON SPLIT FINAL TWO PRIMARIES. In Montana, CNN reports Obama topped Clinton 57%-41%, while in South Dakota, Clinton beat Obama 55%-45%, CNN reports this morning.

Clinton Wins South Dakota Primary. The Sioux Falls Argus Leader (6/4, Ellis) reports that Sen. Hillary Clinton "scored an upset victory Tuesday in South Dakota over Barack Obama, winning a majority of the state's Democratic presidential delegates. But the win in South Dakota was overshadowed by Obama's historic assumption of the Democratic nomination for president. 'Thanks so much to South Dakota,' Clinton said during a speech in New York. 'You had the last word of this primary season, and it was worth the wait.' Clinton led 55 percent to 45 percent with 99 percent of the vote counted early today. As late as Monday, some national observers said Obama would easily triumph in South Dakota and Montana - the final primaries of the contest. Obama did win in Montana."

The Rapid City Journal (6/4, Woster) reports, "In a single line delivered to a national television audience Tuesday night in New York City," Clinton "told the story of her successful campaign in South Dakota. Clinton, who topped" Obama "55 percent to 45 percent" in South Dakota, "said she was campaigning for 'the hard-working men and women who don't always make the headlines but who have always written the American story.'" Clinton made "three stops in Rapid City and a Pine Ridge reservation visit, as well as a succession of appearances in Democratic strongholds east of the Missouri River. And it all paid among voters who admire grit, former state Democratic Party chairwoman Judy Olson Duhamel of Rapid City said Tuesday night. 'Even people who maybe wouldn't have considered voting for her before had to admire her stamina and the fact that she just keeps on working -- and winning,' Olson Duhamel said."

OBAMA CLINCHES DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION. Barack Obama on Tuesday became the first African American to win the nomination of a major political party in the US, as he claimed enough pledged delegates from the contests in Montana and South Dakota and, more importantly, enough superdelegate support yesterday to push him across the 2,118 threshold needed. Ironically, the day's primaries were again a split decision, with Obama winning Montana and Clinton winning South Dakota.

Obama's upset of Hillary Clinton was the lead on each of the network news reports, and was the top story in the major dailies. Obama took a victory lap before a crowd of 17,000 the Xcel Center in St. Paul, Minnesota – site of the GOP convention in August -- praising his defeated rival, Hillary Clinton, and pivoting to target his new adversary, Republican John McCain. USA Today (6/4, Page, Lawrence, 2.28M) reports Obama "clinched the Democratic presidential nomination on the final day of an unprecedented primary season Tuesday, making history by prevailing over" Clinton, who was "once seen as the inevitable nominee." Obama "focused largely on the general election against Republican John McCain at his victory rally late Tuesday in St. Paul." Superdelegates, "among them former president Jimmy Carter, already had lined up behind Obama and pushed him over the 2,118 delegate total needed to be nominated before the polls closed in the Mountain West, where a total of 31 delegates were at stake."

ABC World News (6/3, lead story, 3:00, Tapper, 8.78M) reported, "Obama scored endorsements from more than two dozen superdelegates, including House Majority Whip, Jim Clyburn." Rep. James Clyburn: "I think Obama enunciated a vision for the country going forward."

The CBS Evening News (6/3, lead story, 2:45, Reynolds, 7.66M) reported, "With an eye toward those Republicans who may be disillusioned with the Bush administration, Obama will offer himself as an alternative, arguing that John McCain ensures nothing so much as a third term for Bush, more failures at home and abroad, a candidate with no plan to bring the troops home from Iraq, and a hands-off economic policy without relief for hard-pressed Americans." NBC Nightly News (6/3, lead story, 2:00, Cowan, 9.87M) reported, "Certainly the Obama campaign knows they need" Hillary Clinton's "support and her supporters heading into this general election."

The Minneapolis (MN) Star-Tribune (6/4, Von Sternberg) reports Obama "declared victory Tuesday night at a raucous rally at the Xcel Energy Center in downtown St. Paul." Speaking to 17,000 supporters "who had jammed the arena to witness an historic moment as Obama became the first black candidate in the nation's history to become a major party presidential nominee," Obama said, "Tonight, after fifty-four hard-fought contests, our primary season has finally come to an end."

The AP (6/4, Raum, Pickler) reports Obama's victory "set up a five-month campaign with" McCain, "a race between a first-term Senate opponent of the Iraq War and a 71-year-old former Vietnam prisoner of war and staunch supporter of the current U.S. military mission. And both men seemed eager to begin." In New Orleans, McCain "accused his younger rival of voting 'to deny funds to the soldiers who have done a brilliant and brave job' in Iraq.'" Obama "responded quickly, pausing in his own speech long enough to praise Clinton for 'her strength, her courage and her commitment to the causes that brought us here tonight.'"

CLINTON CAMPAIGN MISTAKES ANALYZED. A broad range of media outlets ran analysis pieces on why Clinton lost her bid for the Democratic nomination, some examples: The Wall Street Journal (6/4, A1, Calmes,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2.06M) reports in a front page story, "Inside the Clinton campaign and out, the finger-pointing has begun. The bottom line is this: She called the biggest plays, and she got them wrong." The mistakes "boil down to mismanagement, message, mobilization failures and the marital factor." Insiders say "control over the campaign resided with a small clique of loyalists close to Sen. Clinton but at odds with each other. Ultimately, however, she relied on an inner circle of two -- her husband, former President Bill Clinton, and their longtime pollster, Mark Penn -- whose instincts often clashed with those of the campaign veterans around them." And Clinton's "management choices, it is widely agreed, gave rise to fatal strategic blunders. The main one, in the eyes of many associates, was her message: She emphasized her Washington experience when voters wanted change." The campaign's "most inarguable mistake was its failure to organize voters in states with caucuses rather than primaries. That left Sen. Obama to build what proved an insurmountable lead in convention delegates." And the campaign "failed to acknowledge the 'Clinton fatigue' felt by many Democrats. Mr. Clinton's controversies on the stump only fanned it."

ABC World News (6/3, story 4, 3:20, Snow, 8.78M) reported, "In the end, there was one truth she simply couldn't overcome. However experienced Hillary Clinton may be, the senator and former First Lady is inextricably tied to the past. And too many voters couldn't imagine her leading the nation into the future." Tad Devine, Democratic strategist: "Hillary Clinton decided to run as the candidate of experience and also to run on the record of the Clinton Administration. Both of those things looked backward."

In an analysis for Gannett (6/4), Chuck Raasch attributes the decline of Clinton's fortunes to seven "forces she and her advisers could not, or did not, see coming," to wit: "A yearning for change," Clinton's perceived inability "to settle on a political style or persona," Democratic voters being more excited about breaking the race barrier than the gender barrier, Clinton's ill-advised focus on large states and Super Tuesday, a lack of substantial policy differences with Obama, the negative impact of Bill Clinton on her campaign, and finally, "Obama's national appeal, backed up by a broader and deeper national campaign strategy than Clinton had, was arguably the most important reason for her loss."

REASONS FOR OBAMA VICTORY EXAMINED. The Washington Post (6/4, A1, Weisman, Murray, Slevin, 723K) reports that almost "from the beginning," Hillary Clinton's "superior name recognition and her sway with state party organizations convinced Barack Obama's brain trust that a junior senator from Illinois was not going to be able to challenge the Clinton political machine head-on." The "insurgent strategy they devised instead was to virtually cede the most important battlegrounds of the Democratic nomination fight to Clinton, using precision targeting to minimize her delegate hauls, while going all out to crush her in states where Democratic candidates rarely ventured and causes that were often ignored." The "surprise was how well his strategy held up -- and how little resistance it met."

The Los Angeles Times (6/5, A1, Barabak, 833K) reports in a front page story that Obama's "victory over Clinton after an epic 16-month battle for the Democratic nomination will go down as one of the great political upsets of all time." It was "a triumph of charisma and soaring oratory -- two of the oldest commodities in politics -- fused with a thoroughly modern campaign that harnessed the Internet like never before."

ABC World News (6/3, story 3, 2:55, Wright, 8.78M) reported, "Obama embraced the one message that was mattered this year." Donna Brazile, Democratic strategist: "Senator Obama had one simple message, and that was change. And throughout the campaign no, matter which way the wind was blowing, Senator Obama stuck with his message of change." Wright: "Just as important, he cast his campaign as a rejection of old-style Washington politics."

In an analysis headlined "How Barack Obama won the nomination," McClatchy (6/4, Talev) relates, "Did Barack Obama upset Hillary Clinton for the Democratic presidential nomination because: A.) He worked harder in Iowa and other caucus and early-voting states and built a national movement of youth and grass-roots activists and small-dollar donors? B.) His campaign staff worked more harmoniously than Clinton's and without a sense of entitlement? C.) His 11-win streak after Feb. 5's Super Tuesday contests cost Clinton so much in delegates, momentum and money that her big wins later on weren't enough? D.) He's a gifted speechmaker whose message of change and less divisive politics had broader appeal than Clinton's claim that she was ready on day one? The answer is: E.) All of the above."

McCain website posts commentary calling Hillary Clinton a 'B*tch.'

Recently, Sen. John McCain has been reaching out to Sen. Hillary Clinton's (D-NY) supporters by lavishing praise on Clinton. But a "news article " posted on McCain's website may undermine those efforts. The "article," which is actually a reader's comment made at Andrew Sullivan's Daily Dish , refers to Clinton as "the B*tch ":

> Fred Thompson is good but pointless. He clearly doesn't want to be in this race. His wife must really want to be First Lady. Paul is hopeless. Huckabee is at least sincere, but I just feel that nominating him is tantamount to giving away the store. He's a big-government liberal with the compassion of Jimmy Carter and a nanny-state busybody of the highest order. I'd rather have the Bitch. At least she'd balance the budget. You know, like her husband did.

This isn't the first time McCain has been associated with such insulting descriptions of Clinton. In 2007, after a supporter asked him "how do we beat the b*tch," McCain replied "that's an excellent question ." (HT: Americablog)

This is why the world hates lawyers. What's worse is that the HBS prof (with a JD) is actually abusing the statute (MGL 93a), which I happen to teach. The statute requires a demand letter before litigation, which should just be for the refund, but this shvantz is demanding the treble damages that he would get from successful litigation. If you're going to go inappropriately legal on someone, at least get it right.

A Strategy for Increasing Iowa's Minimum Wage

Des Moines, Iowa – The minimum wage, as it currently exists in Iowa and much of the country, amounts to a government subsidy of corporate America. Minimum wage earners who work forty-hour work weeks are classified as being below the federal poverty level, which means these workers qualify for welfare benefits including food stamps and healthcare. They are the working poor. They are not being paid a "living wage."

Sir,

I would be careful with the Senate GOP on the military pensions/budget issue. They have latched onto this issue and are making noise. They have for a long time supported moving pensions to a 401k. Its a bad idea, the military already has a TSP for people who don't serve 20 years. All the VSOs will attack it so I think anything you can do to let people know you will protect military pensions will defuse the Senate Repubs and any potential issue with the Legion etc. Our online members would go bonkers if anyone touched military pensions I just don't believe this budget does that.

A better way to lower long term costs on Veterans is to limit the claims, which is made easier by doing a hard cost/benefit analysis on Afghanistan. I for one support drones and have resisted folks trying to get VoteVets into the fight. Its hard to be against a "weapons system." There are some legal issue I think should be addressed but I like decisive weapons that keep ground troops form risky missions. Less wars equals less future claims and costs.

On a side note we will very active working against big oil on the RFS. Lots of national security messaging and we will be pushing our activists during the EPA period.

Also, the new Veteran Outreach contact in OPE, Tanya Bradsher just retired and is the best POC we have had there since the administration began. She learns quick and is a real asset to the WH. She knows how to utilize certain Veterans groups for certain issues and navigates the arena well to best support the WH agenda.

Thanks,

Subject: BIG PUSH NEEDED!

Dear John,

We need a Big Push from you! Our race this morning has been called a "nail-biter"!

Today, three polls were released:

- Sestak 45% - Specter 45%, 9% undecided (Muhlenberg College daily tracking poll)
- Specter 44% - Sestak 42%, 10% undecided (Quinnipiac Poll)
- Sestak 38% - Specter 35%, 27% undecided (Franklin & Marshall College Poll)

Quinnipiac's Pollster stated:

> "The intangibles are clearly on Sestak's side. He has the momentum and the anti-incumbent wave sweeping the country is a good omen for the challenger. Troubling for Specter is that one in seven likely primary voters are undecided and incumbents -- especially 30-year incumbents who have switched parties -- rarely get much of the undecided vote."

Franklin & Marshall's Pollster stated:

> "A full 65 percent of Democrats said it's "time for a change" from Specter, while only 26 percent said he deserves to be reelected".

The last 6 days are key to winning and getting our message out to voters through greater rotation of our ads.

We need a big PUSH from you to help us get our ads in greater rotations to reach the undecided voters AND to continue our surge. Please make a contribution -- whatever you are able to afford -- every dollar is making a difference.

Arlen Specter is up with a flurry of ads. Help us to counter his ads.

Let's win this together!

Warmly,
Joe

Subject: Speech on housing this morning

This morning I spoke at the Zillow housing forum on how millenials have fared in the recovery and their behavior in the housing market. The prepared text of my speech is pasted below.

America's Millennials in the Recovery

Jason Furman
Chairman, Council of Economic Advisers

The Zillow Housing Forum
Washington, DC
July 24, 2014

As Prepared for Delivery

In the last few months, there has been no shortage of public concern over the opportunities for America's millennial generation of young adults—be it their prospects for school, job, house, or life partner in the aftermath of the Great Recession. Such attention is certainly well merited. The Great Recession was felt acutely across the American population but perhaps more so for our youths: while the unemployment rate for those over 34 peaked at about 8 percent, the unemployment rate among those between the ages of 18 and 34 peaked at 14 percent in 2010 and remains elevated, despite substantial improvement; delinquency rates on student loans have risen several percentage points since the Great Recession and even into the recovery; and the homeownership rate among young adults has dropped from a peak of 43 percent in 2005 to 37 percent in 2013 concurrent with a large increase in the share living with their parents.

As often occurs when precipitous changes appear to mark a generation, there has been much speculation regarding the economic forces driving the differences between millennials and those in my generation or my parents' generation. Are good jobs harder to find for today's young adults? Will growing student loan debt hold back millennials' homeownership opportunities? Will they ever purchase homes or are do we have on our hands a "Lost Generation" consigned to a lifetime of renting, living in small condos, or even worse for all concerned—spending the coming decades living with their parents?

To be sure, these questions do not admit any straightforward answers, and it may take years before we are able to fully disentangle the interplay between the housing and labor markets in a satisfying way. But today I would like to look at millennials more closely and bring to bear some of the existing economic data and research on the issue in an attempt to better understand the trends in millennials' behavior, with particular attention to its implications for the housing sector. These data imply that it may be premature to suggest that trends among today's youth are a reflection of a profound change in their preferences or attitudes in the aftermath of the Great Recession when many of these trends were on the horizon long before the recession began and they have been compounded by the large but likely temporary effects of the recession itself. However, regardless of the cause of the recent developments, the ultimate outcomes for this generation will also depend on our policy choices.

Millennials in the Economic Recovery

There is no doubt that millennials have been very unlucky, given that many had to seek out a first job in what was an extraordinarily distressed labor market in 2008. As Peter Orszag recently noted – "Born in 1988? Sorry." The Great Recession was the most severe since the Great Depression, putting 8.6 million people put out of work, of whom 47 percent were between the ages of 18 and 34.[1] (While definitions vary, millennials are often defined as those born starting in roughly 1980 to the 2000s; that means that millennials were between 8 to 28 years old when the recession began in 2008 and are now 14 to 34 years old. In my remarks today I focus on ages 18 to 34 as a more meaningful and intertemporally comparable age group.)

The overall unemployment rate for workers 18 to 34 peaked at 14 percent and has since come down to 9 percent, which is about 72 percent of the way back to its pre-recession average value but still unacceptably high, as shown in Table 1. This is slightly less than the recovery for the overall unemployment rate—which is 83 percent of the way back to the average of the last expansion.

A range of other labor market indicators shown in Table 1 tell a similar story—a substantial recovery, but one that is not complete and is lagging somewhat behind the recovery for other age groups. Long-term unemployment for millennials, like for the broader workforce, is double its previous average. Younger men are more likely to be unemployed than young women—much like they were before the recession. African-American youth have more than twice the unemployment rate of whites, something that was equally true before the recession as after. The unemployment rate of young college graduates remains much lower than that of all other groups, although it has declined somewhat slower than those with less education. Finally, like with the overall unemployment rate, you see the labor market recovery not just in the official unemployment rate but also in broader measures of people without jobs, although the broadest measure which includes people working part-time for economic reasons, has further to go.

The Great Recession comes on top of a longer-term trend of reduced labor force participation and increased schooling by young people. Labor force participation among the youngest workers (those 18-34 years old) has fallen steadily since its peak in the late 1980s, and is now 5 percentage points lower than it was 30 years ago, as seen in Figure 1. However, at the same time the share of people in this age group in school has risen so that the fraction either working or in school has been roughly constant. Research has shown that both increasing enrollment and decreasing participation rates among students have contributed to the overall lower participation rate, with the former being the primary factor in the late 1980s and 1990s, and the latter driving the decline since then.

School enrollment generally has a cyclical component as young people enroll in school in greater numbers and stay longer in recessions, both because unemployment is high and in order to enhance their skills to become more competitive in a tougher job market. This increase in educational attainment was primarily at the college level with some additional enrollment at the post-college or graduate level. Encouragingly, most of this rise in college enrollments among millennials comes from students who are on track to complete their degrees on time, not from students who are avoiding the job market by taking five or six years to complete a four-year degree.

However, accompanying this increase in schooling has been an increase in the amount of student debt and an alarming increase in student debt delinquency rates. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York estimates in the first quarter that total student loan debt is nearly $1.1 trillion, more than double what it was in 2005 and larger than any other category of debt except for mortgages. Of total student loan debt today, roughly 11 percent has been categorized as seriously delinquent, up 4.4 percentage points since the end of 2005. Numerous factors can account for the increase in borrowing: growth in the student population, a shift in the student population to a higher ratio of lower-income students who are more likely to take out loans, a rise in the cost of college, lower household incomes as a result of the Great Recession, and more limited access to other forms of credit, such as home equity loans, that parents have previously used to pay for their children's college educations. These factors manifest themselves in the rising average and median debt levels per household, as shown in Figure 2.

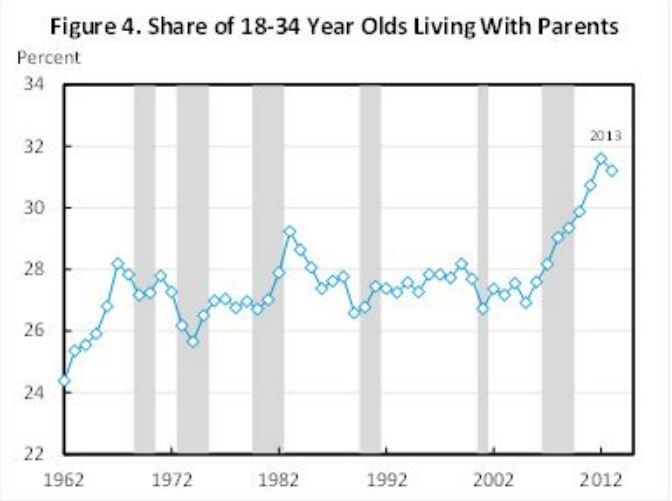
Source: Federal Reserve Survey of Consumer Finances; Brookings Institution (2014).



Millennials are also getting married later than previous cohorts, but as with educational attainment, the declines in marriage propensity for millennials are largely in line with a strong pre-existing trend, as shown in Figure 3, with little sign of a major change in the wake of the Great Recession. At least in part, the postponement of marriage may be the result of increased educational attainment—as people with college degrees tend to marry at older ages and this relationship has held even as the share of students going to college has expanded.

Source: U.S. Census and American Community Survey; CEA calculations.

Finally, of particular importance to the housing market issues that I am focused on today is the fact that record numbers of 18 to 34 year olds are currently living at home with their parents, as shown in Figure 4. This means they not only do not own homes but that they are also not a source of demand for rentals either.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Source: IPUMS-CPS; CEA calculations.

This elevated share of young adults living at home is especially notable among millenials without jobs, which, when combined with observations about millenials' student debt burdens and marriage rates, have raised numerous questions about how prolonged their delay into these conventional indicators of adulthood might be, including whether and when they will become homeowners. For example, it is easy to speculate how falling homeownership rates and the recovery of multifamily construction signal a shift in preferences toward renting among millennials, or at least those that have moved out of their parents' homes. In what follows, I will discuss whether this particular interpretation of the data is justified or whether a more nuanced view is useful in understanding the implications of millennials' behavior for housing markets.

A Deeper Dive on Millennials at Home and Housing Activity

From 2012 to 2013, residential investment grew at double digit rates, making a major and timely contribution to the overall economic recovery just as fiscal support was waning. At the same time, we have seen strong house price growth, fewer underwater borrowers, and falling distressed sales. But even with this recovery, residential construction is well below its pre-recession, pre-bubble steady state levels—and in the last two quarters the residential investment component of GDP has been negative, although largely because of declining commissions associated with existing home sales than declining construction activity.

This restrained construction activity likely is a function of several factors: tight lending standards and supply material constraints to name a few. But, particularly over the long run, construction is largely demand-driven, for which a key demographic is millennials who now comprise the largest generation in U.S. history. As seen in Table 2 below, the single largest driver of overall demand for residential construction is the number of new households formed, or "household formation."

Table 2. Contribution of Selected Determinants for Supply and Demand of Homes

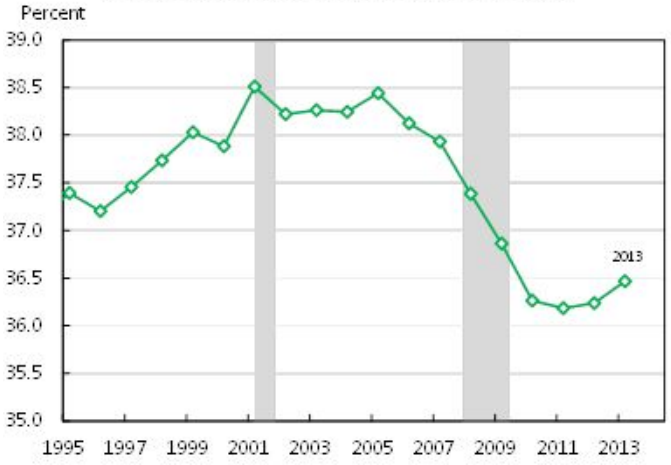
Sources: Census Bureau, Housing Vacancy Survey; Current Population Survey.



In recent years, getting an accurate picture of new household formation has been difficult due to an unprecedented divergence in readings from the two different surveys that are the standard sources for the data. These estimates suggest a wide range of 600,000 to 1.3 million households per year. If the reality is somewhere in between, then as you can see in Table 2, household formation in recent years has been weak and below average household formation in previous decades.[2]

Household formation is the product of two factors: the overall population and the "headship rate," the share of population that either rents or owns, in effect the share of the population not living at home. The recent weak household formation readings mostly reflect a decline in headship, including for young adults, as seen in Figure 5. In fact, the decline in headship among young adults alone over the last decade likely resulted in a loss of over 1 million households cumulatively. Had this decline—and the consequent rise in young adults living at home—not occurred, millennials would be boosting housing demand, and in turn residential construction.

Source: IPUMS-CPS; CEA calculations.

So what caused this drop in the headship rate in millennials and is it reversible? Some have speculated that this increase in those living at home and concurrent decrease in headship is a function of measurement in surveys, whereby those in college are classified as living at home. However, even among 18 to 24 year olds not enrolled in college and 25 to 34 year olds, who are presumably out of college, the share of individuals living with their parents also increased sharply during the Great Recession.[3] So, while these measurement concerns may be part of the story, they do not appear to account for much of large increases observed for millennials.

One factor certainly at play is the business cycle and the impaired labor markets during the Great Recession. As documented in the economics literature, the headship rate has a significant cyclical component and business cycle conditions are the primary factors determining headship decisions in the short-run.[4] Indeed, as can be seen in Figure 6, since the 1970s, headship among young adults, shown by the green line plotted against an inverted axis, has roughly been the inverse of the unemployment rate for the same demographic. As can be seen in the figure, however, the recovery in headship rates has fallen well short of the recovery in the unemployment rate—a point I will return to. More detailed analysis that we have undertaken looks state-by-state at the relationship between headship and unemployment confirms that cyclical factors account for a large part of the decline in headship during the recession.[5] Moreover, the Great Recession strained the economic and financial resources of the parents of millennials, who may in turn have reduced their financial support of their adult children or have encouraged them to move back home to help with expenses.

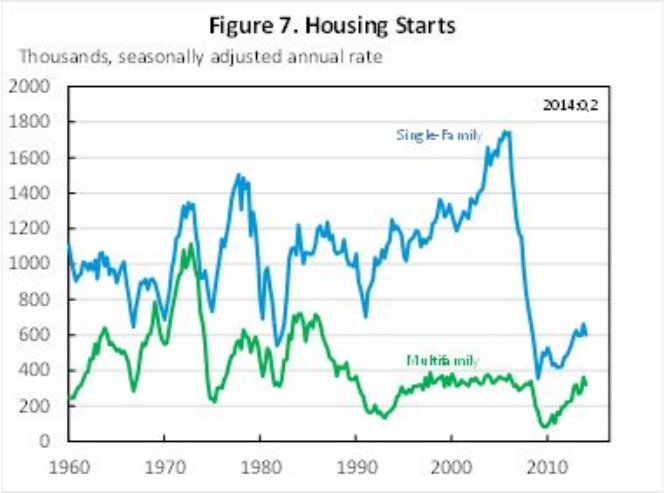
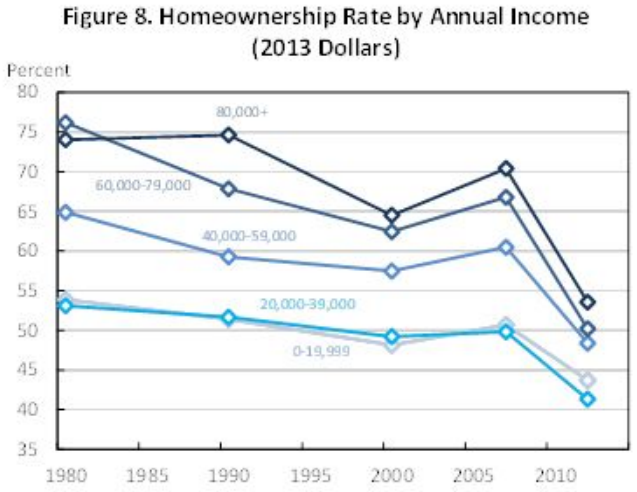
Source: IPUMS-CPS; Bureau of Labor Statistics.



This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

These considerations suggest that as the economy and labor markets continue to improve, headship among millennials could rise and provide a boost to household formation. However, as I discuss below, the outlook for homeownership among millennials features more uncertainty in both the near and long-term.

The Outlook for Homeownership Among Millennials



While headship is the most important factor in understanding the dynamics of housing markets, it is also important to understand whether a millennial owns or rents. On average, construction of a multifamily unit results in about 60 percent less contribution to GDP than a single-family unit would.[6]

In the recovery so far, the decline in multifamily construction was relatively small and has fully recovered while single family fell dramatically and remains well from recovered, as shown in Figure 7. Some have argued that the Great Recession resulted in a profound shift in preferences for millennials toward renting so that, under this hypothesis, even if the headship rate and household formation were to recover, millennials would be a generation of renters rather than homeowners.

Source: Census Bureau.

At this stage in the recovery, ascertaining whether there is a permanent shift in preferences is difficult to know conclusively but several factors call this interpretation of the data into question. For one, there does not appear to be a drastic shift in the homeownership rate over successive cohorts of young adults beyond the previously identified secular trend in "delayed adulthood." As seen in Figure 8, the long-run decline in ownership is present across income levels but is largest for high earners, consistent with larger declines in headship among this group. Analysis undertaken by Trulia's Jed Kolko finds that the homeownership rate among young adults features a secular downward trend explained by changing demographics rather than a drastic change in preferences. That said, as the sharp post-recession changes in Figure 8 show, consistent with the longer-standing cyclical patterns, there is good reason to believe that the large increase in unemployment in the wake of the recession would have a commensurately large—but temporary—impact on both headship and homeownership.

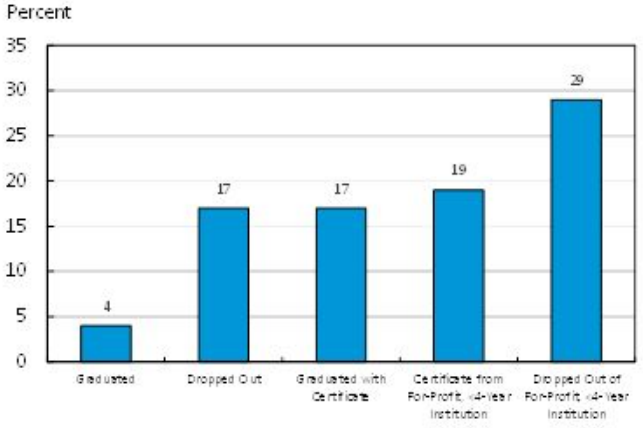
Source: Census Bureau, American Community Survey; CEA calculations.

Even with the economy well along the way to recovery, mortgage credit availability for households, and first-time homebuyers in particular, remains very tight and has shown only very few signs of easing. Indeed, research by Federal

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Reserve economist Neil Bhutta estimates that higher credit score thresholds used by lenders in the aftermath of the Great Recession can explain about 40 percent of the drop in first-time home buying in recent years relative to the early 2000s. In contrast, builders do not appear to be facing as many constraints to finance multifamily construction as with single-family construction. Notably, issuance of private-label commercial mortgage-backed securities has recovered to pre-bubble levels and the Federal Reserve's Senior Loan Officer Opinion Survey has reported net easing of standards for commercial real estate loans for the last 3 years.

Finally, the recovery in multifamily construction may be a byproduct of the uneven housing market recovery. To date, construction of multifamily units has been concentrated in markets with relatively inelastic housing supply. On balance, these markets feature relatively high density and currently do not have a large supply of vacant homes. In contrast, the less dense markets with a predominantly single-family housing stock were hit hardest by the recession and still have an outsized overhang of vacant homes. Hence the recovery in multifamily construction and the low levels of single-family construction that we see in the aggregate could reflect the different stages of the housing market recovery in these two types of markets.



The Implications of Student Debt for Homeownership

Many have posed the possibility for rising levels of student loan debt and delinquencies to weigh on homeownership. The theoretical justification for why this could be the case rests on at least three factors. First, all else equal, higher levels of debt can lead borrowers to trigger underwriting thresholds that make mortgages more expensive than they otherwise would be. Second, student loan delinquencies lower credit scores, which in turn raises the cost of credit. Lastly, student loan debt and delinquencies could lead young adults to live with their parents.

However, whether the burden of student loan debt is the ultimate cause of today's low home buying activity among young adults remains an open question empirically. On the one hand, higher student loan debt is a byproduct of the higher enrollment seen in recent years. If the higher returns to education justify the investment that millennials made, then one can view today's relatively low rates of homeownership among millennials as temporary—schooling, rather than debt, is delaying household formation and homeownership to later in the lifecycle. Eventually, these young adults will leave their parents' nests, rent homes, get married, buy homes, and have children. In this case, the outlook for homeownership is positive. However, many young people, including those with student loans, will face costs from entering the labor market during such a terrible recession for years to come. In addition, many students financing their education through debt may have been inadequately prepared to manage the financial complications of managing debt. For both of these groups, the burden of servicing student loan debt could make it difficult to save for a down payment and buy a home.

Moreover, the student debt story is not just about averages—it is also importantly about the much greater likelihood of missing student loan payments among those who attend low-value added schools or do not complete their education, as shown in Figure 9. As a result, it could be having a greater impact on the housing market for these types of individuals.

Conclusion: An Agenda for Millennials and the Housing Sector

The Administration recognizes that a vibrant housing sector is a key driver for economic growth and that millennials in particular are critical to at least partially making up for the unprecedented declines in construction activity following the Great Recession. To that end, there are several areas of policy I want to highlight that help address this issue.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

First, the President's overall economic agenda to create jobs, increase growth and raise wages will all help millenials and the housing market. This includes everything from investing in areas like infrastructure and research to reforming to the business tax code to workforce policies to address long-term unemployment and improve job matches to increasing the minimum wage.

Second, policies that specifically focus on labor force attachment among young people can raise their labor force participation throughout life and offset the long-term declining trend in participation I discussed at the Hamilton Project at the Brookings Institution last week.[7] For example, earlier this year the President announced $100 million in funding for American Apprenticeship Grants, which will use existing funds to expand apprenticeships, training young people for high-demand jobs and helping them build relationships with employers. Additionally, the Administration will award $500 million to community colleges to implement job training programs based on the skills and credentials in-demand among businesses. The President has similarly committed to re-designing high school curricula to focus more on industry-relevant skills. All of these initiatives aim to give young people labor market skills and connect them with employment opportunities, raising their labor force participation over the long term.

Third, addressing debt and college is essential. The President supports Senator Warren's proposal to refinance student debt and, in the absence of Congressional action, has signed a Presidential Memorandum to direct the Secretary of Education to propose regulations that would allow nearly 5 million federal student loan borrowers to cap their monthly payments at 10 percent of their income. At the same time, as I discussed, a lot of the most serious challenges with debt are for those who end up in a low-quality program that does not prepare them for a good job or, potentially worse, those who do not complete. That is why the Administration has focused on completion by launching the college scorecard and proposing a Race to the Top for college affordability and completion. In addition, the Administration is developing gainful employment regulations to encourage programs to improve.

Finally, a range of housing policies can be particularly helpful for first-time homebuyers, including many millennials. Mortgage credit is currently tighter than other forms of credit, and one reason that lenders point to is uncertainty over the conditions under which Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) will obligate lenders to repurchase mortgages should the borrower become delinquent. In May, the FHA embarked on a program to address these concerns, and acting independently, Federal Housing Finance Administration (FHFA) Director Mel Watt has also undertaken steps to provide clarity on so-called put-back risk and thereby ease credit constraints in the mortgage market. Also, the Administration has extended the Making Home Affordable program to continue to help struggling homeowners facing foreclosure or whose mortgages are underwater. Lastly, the FHA announced a program in May to reduce insurance premiums for homeowners who receive housing counseling.

While it may yet be revealed that millennials' preferences have changed permanently in light of the recession, I hope that some of the evidence I have presented here today can temper such speculations. Although we have seen a slow but steady evolution in areas like college attendance, marriage and labor force participation for many decades, there is no strong reason to believe that millennials are dramatically different than the generations of Americans that preceded them. Rather, it is the unlucky economic times with which they were presented with that explains much of their challenge. We have the ability to do a lot to address those challenges—and the onus is on us to do so.

Subject:	Update for Today - CNN poll, New Ad

Friends – We wanted to send you a couple updates today.

(1) You'll see some key points on the new CNN poll this morning listed below. The poll proves, yet again, how strong Hillary Clinton continues to be in this race. We hope the points are helpful.

(2) As you may have already seen, we put our third television ad into rotation in Iowa and New Hampshire today. This focused squarely on the economic argument Hillary Clinton is making about reshuffling the deck so that being middle class means something again. You can watch it here .

(3) If you are doing any media and have questions for our team about emails or other issues, as always, please let us know how we can help!

Here are key takeaways of the newly released CNN/ORC poll:

Hillary Clinton holds significant leads over all of the GOP candidates tested, including a 9-point lead over Jeb Bush and 6-point leads over both Scott Walker and Donald Trump. In the August 2011 CNN poll four years ago, President Obama was essentially tied with Mitt Romney – ahead by just 1 point.

Clinton continues to have far higher favorabilities than the best-known Republican alternatives. While Clinton is -9 points in this poll (44 fav/53 unfav), Jeb Bush has fallen to -22 points (34/56) and Trump is -23 points (36/59).

As was always expected once she re-entered politics as a candidate, Clinton saw a dip in her approval rating from CNN's March numbers (mid 50s) to their May and July numbers (mid 40s) according to CNN polling. But, despite relentless Republican attacks, Hillary Clinton's favorability declined only 2 points since the May CNN poll nearly three months ago, and just 1 point from the last CNN poll in July.

Hillary Clinton continues to be the overwhelming favorite in the Democratic primary – leading by almost 20 points (48 percent to 27 percent). In fact, a total of 74% of Democrats list Clinton as either their 1st or 2nd choice; 43% do the same for Sanders.

On the major questions Democratic primary voters have, they choose Hillary Clinton – best to handle the economy by 19 points, race relations by 24 points, foreign policy by 52 points, and even "handle the income gap" by 7 points.

Since the Republican debate, Donald Trump has now become the standard-bearer for the Republican party. He's not only leading all their Republican candidates for the nomination, but this poll makes it seem he's the strongest alternative they could offer to the general election which tells you how weak their field really is.

Dear Cheryl, Bruce, Jack, all:

We are set for WH Counsel o
Office reunion for Saturday night, December 13.
I will reserve an area at 8 pm at Rumors, 19th and M, for the food and libations into the evening. Before then,at 7 pm, we will for the Roast, MC'd by the infamous and formidable Roaster, Lanny Breuer, at the offices of Levick, next door, 1900 M Street, 4th floor.

I need 1) RSVPS from all on this list and 2) please send me names and email addresses of everyone you can think of - whenever they served. Our focus is on the 95-00 era but all alumni are welcome. (For example, Bernie Nusbaum and I have stayed in touch and I will certainly invite him. Friends who served in press and political offices at WH, such as McCurry, Sosnick, Rahm, et al. --whom we attorneys often tormented -- will be welcome, as well as friends then at DoJ, including our friend who is the current AG.

Look forward to hearing from you and getting your lists/ema addresses.

Contact point and coordinator for this event is Maddie Melendez, 202-973-5346 (copied above), who has managed to survive working with me (or me for her) since I left WH, or 15 years!

Regards,

Lanny

Ok - the response from all - and I mean all - has been enthusiastic for reunion of Clinton WH Counsel's office circa the Quinn-Mills era plus or minus whatever.

So I am going to going a head and propose a date:

Saturday December 13 early evening somewhere in DC - or Sun Dec 14 brunch hour - or both. Less likely since close to Christmas but another option would be Sat Dec 20 or Sun Dec 21 brunch or both.

All: please vote.

The idea: the WH Counsels roast the deputies, the deputies roast back, and the rest of us roast everyone -- and Lanny Breuer - with the odd title of "Special Counsel (not that Lannythinks he is "special"), and with the odd first name that is not a nickname - as the MC.

Please respond if either of these weekends work and which one in order of preference.

Maybe even our former client can be found back in the USA this time of year to make it too, or could send a recorded message reminding us how much he loves lawyers!

Special note to Bruce Lindsey: please come! We need you for special roast material!

May ask all on this list to:

1) tell me "yes" you can make it on the 13th/14th or 20th/21st. I will circulate the consensus choice. And
2) send me names and email addresses of all you can think of who should be invited.

I will then let all know whether the 13th/14th or 20th/21st works for the most people.

Here's hoping we can pull this off.

Best to all,

Lanny

As of 7:55 PM, flights for tonight are listed as follows:

American Airlines flight 4117
Departure: 8:55 PM
ON TIME

United Airlines flight 628
Departure time: 9:00 PM
DELAYED - new departure time is 9:39 PM

US Airways flight 6550
Departure time: 9:36 PM
DELAYED - new departure time is 9:51 PM

We've called around to several hotels in the airport surrounding area and most are sold out and/or over the approved rate. Our guidance is that travelers whose flights are cancelled or do not wish to wait at the airport should proceed to the Hilton located at 720 S. Michigan. Please inform us if that is their choice though, as we need to inform the hotel and process billing information.

If the flights do end up being cancelled, we've got to work directly with the airlines to have them rescheduled.

I will be away from my email for the next 20 minutes. In the event of an emergency, please call my blackberry at 202-510-8867.

Thanks,

Notice that HRC will be in Los Angeles on Feb. 22nd for fundraiser with Mayor Garcetti. Any chance we can push to get her down to Ports of Long Beach/Los Angeles or is it too short a window? If it's a possibility, I can have Mayor of Long Beach reach out to her. Would envision a short tour of the facility, short roundtable with industry folks and labor members. Thoughts?

In addition, we discussed the specific project underway at the Middle Harbor in Long Beach which at build out will be the largest seaport terminal facility in North America and will utilize all zero emission equipment including the world's largest battery exchange building.

Hold on to your hat!! It is time for appropriations season. In the coming days, many of the twelve House Appropriation subcommittees will begin dividing up the $1.1 trillion allotted for discretionary expenditures in the fiscal year that will begin on October 1.

Appropriators have been on something of a rebound since they passed the omnibus appropriation for 2014 but they have a long way to go if they hope to regain the power and stature the committee held for much of the twentieth century.

Here is a comparison of the House Appropriations Committee then and now.

This is the block updated from our conversation Saturday. A few things:

- it sounds like getting a picture of taking the girls to school would involve a waiver. What is a 2nd option for a photo that day?
- Do we have a podium sign with the seal being printed somewhere?
- We have locked a ballroom at the Hyatt for avails. We are trying to lock an additional ballroom for the meeting followed by avail for Friday.
- We are close to having office space locked for Wed-Friday. Adam Hitchcock will update later today. Hopefully Ariel Cap which is one block from our HQ and one block from Hyatt.

We should get this to BO if no one has issues.

The joy of growth, the glory of action, the splendor of beauty...today well-lived makes every yesterday a memory of happiness and every tomorrow a vision of hope. McCains Failed To Pay Taxes On California Home For Four Years, Newsweek To Report

Newsweek is set to publish a highly embarrassing report on Sen. John McCain, revealing that the McCains have failed to pay taxes on their beach-front home in La Jolla, California, for the last four years and are currently in default, The Huffington Post has learned.

Under California law, once a residential property is in default for five years, it can be sold at a tax sale to recover the unpaid taxes for the taxpayers.

The McCains own at least seven homes through a variety of trusts and corporations controlled by Cindy McCain.

Clinton Campaign to Focus on Economic Security, Opportunity

By: Julie Pace, AP

http://abcnews.go.com/Politics/wireStory/clinton-campaign-focus-economic-security-opportunity-30251245?singlePage=true

Hillary Rodham Clinton's presidential campaign will center on boosting economic security for the middle class and expanding opportunities for working families, while casting the former senator and secretary of state as a "tenacious fighter" able to get results, two senior advisers said Saturday.

They provided the first preview of the message that Clinton planned to convey when she launches her long-anticipated campaign on Sunday with an online video. Until now, the former first lady has offered only hints of what would drive her if she were to run a second time for the White House .

The strategy described by Clinton's advisers has echoes of President Barack Obama's 2012 re-election campaign. He framed the choice for voters as between Democrats focused on the middle class and Republicans wanting to protect the wealthy and return to policies that led to the 2008 economic collapse.

The advisers said Clinton will argue that voters have a similar choice in 2016. Clinton also intends to sell herself as being able to work with Congress, businesses and world leaders.

That approach could be perceived as a critique of Obama, Clinton's rival for the nomination in 2008. He has largely been unable to fulfill his pledge to end Washington's intense partisanship and found much of his presidency stymied by gridlock with Congress.

The Clinton advisers spoke on condition of anonymity in order to discuss her plans ahead of Sunday's announcement. People familiar with the plans say Clinton will travel to Iowa and other early-voting states to hold small events with residents in the days after the video's release.

Clinton is not expected to roll out detailed policy positions in the first weeks of her campaign. Advisers said she planned to talk about ways families can increase take-home pay, the importance of expanding early childhood education and making higher education more affordable.

It's not yet clear whether that will include a noticeable break with Obama on economic policy. The GOP has hammered Obama's approach as anti-business and insufficient in the wake of the recession. The White House says the economy has improved significantly in recent years.

The unemployment rate fell to 5.5 percent in March, but manufacturing and new home construction slowed, cheaper gas has yet to ignite consumer spending and participation in the labor force remains sluggish.

Clinton will enter the race as the overwhelming favorite for her party's nomination. Still, her team has said her early strategy is designed to avoid appearing to take that nomination for granted.

The early events will include discussions at colleges, day care centers and private homes, and stops at coffee shops and diners. After about a month of such events, Clinton will give a broader speech outlining more specifics about her rationale for running.

In 2008, Clinton followed a video announcement with a large rally in Des Moines, Iowa.

Clinton's husband, Bill, and daughter, Chelsea, are unlikely to appear at her early events. Bill Clinton , the former two-term president, said recently that he wanted to play a role as a "backstage adviser" in his wife's campaign.

Advisers said Bill Clinton has been engaged with his wife in some of the policy discussions leading up to this weekend's rollout.

To prepare for the campaign, Clinton has spent months meeting with economic policy experts, including Heather Boushey, whose research focuses on inequality, and Teresa Ghilarducci, a labor economist and retirement policy expert. The policy development process has been overseen by aides Jake Sullivan and Dan Schwerin.

In the days before her announcement, Clinton has been holding lengthy meetings with her staff, sometimes joining them at her crowded personal offices in midtown Manhattan and other times participating by phone.

Clinton's growing team of staffers began working out of a new campaign headquarters in Brooklyn on Friday.

She is expected to reach out to donors in the coming weeks, but does not plan to headline many fundraising events over the next month.

Obama Ally Accuses GOP Of Doing Big Oil's Bidding After Gulf Spill (VIDEO)

First Posted: 05-20-10 09:16 AM | Updated: 05-20-10 09:21 AM

A group allied with the Obama White House released a new television advertisement Wednesday attacking Republicans for foot-dragging on energy legislation in light of the massive oil spill in the Gulf.

In one of the sharpest indications of the politicization of the BP disaster to date, the group Americans United for Change's ad places images of oil rushing into the Gulf waters alongside accusations that the GOP is doing the bidding of the oil industry.

"2.5 million gallons of oil have flowed into the gulf each day," the narrator declares in the ad. "But oil isn't just polluting the Gulf -- It's polluting our politics. In the last three and a half years, the oil industry has given over $35 million dollars to Republicans. Tell Mitch McConnell and the Republicans to stop blocking clean energy and start holding the polluters accountable. Tell them to pass the American Power Act."

The spot reflects what appears to be a growing willingness among Democratic lawmakers and institutions to use the crisis in the Gulf to achieve legislative progress in D.C. Earlier in the week, President Obama himself accused the GOP of playing "special interest politics" by holding up a vote that would increase the liability of oil companies responsible for economic-damaging spills.

The problem, of course, is that the energy legislation that both the president and American United for Change are promoting contains an expansion of offshore drilling -- making it harder to charge (as in the ad) that Democrats, not Republicans, want to hold the "polluters accountable." That said, the offshore drilling component is just one part of a much broader proposal that seems likely to gain limited if any Republican support in the Senate.

The ad, according to a AUC official, will be going up on national cable starting on Wednesday, with an initial purchase of $50,000.

Liberal group hits GOP on oil record in new ad

By Michael O'Brien - 05/20/10

Millions of dollars in donations from oil companies to Republican candidates have polluted Washington, a liberal group charged Thursday in a new ad.

Americans United for Change launched a television ad hitting Senate Republicans' response to the oil spill, as well as their stance on the energy and climate bill introduced last week by Sens. John Kerry (D-Mass.) and Joe Lieberman (I-Conn.).

The ad, which will begin airing over the next week on cable news networks in the Washington area, includes video of one of the underwater leaks in the oil pipeline in the Gulf of Mexico, which has spilled thousands of barrels of oil into coastal waters over the last month.

"We understand that Senate Republicans have been given 35 million reasons by the big oil companies to stand in the way of clean energy legislation," AUFC communications director Jeremy Funk said. "In the face of an environmental catastrophe of this magnitude, we hope that even the Grand Oil Party will think twice before standing with the polluters and standing in the way of a clean-energy future and new clean-energy jobs.”

Republicans have given Kerry and Lieberman's "American Power Act" a chilly reception since it was unveiled last week. The GOP has also objected to attempts in the past week by Democrats to raise the amount of damages for which oil companies are liable in the case of an accident.

Republicans have objected to unanimous-consent attempts to raise the liability to $10 billion (from a present level of $75 million), reasoning that more specificity in the law is needed and arguing that it could strangle independent oil producers.

With Sen. Lisa Murkowski blocking quick passage of a bill in the Senate to raise the penalties BP faces for the Gulf oil spill, the Democratic-affiliated Americans United for Change is firing off an ad tarring Republicans with big oil money.

The aim of the spot is to promote energy reform legislation, but New Jersey Sen. Bob Menendez probably doesn’t mind the pressure it could bring for his oil spill bill, which would raise the cap on economic damages BP must pay to $10 billion from $75 million.

The ad is called “Dirty,” and says Republicans have taken $35 million from the oil industry in recent years. It’s main point: “The oil isn’t just polluting the Gulf — It’s polluting our politics.”

The spot will run for the next week on D.C.-area cable.

"We understand that Senate Republicans have been given 35 million reasons by the big oil companies to stand in the way of clean energy legislation," said AUC's Jeremy Funk. "But there are 2.5 million better reasons to join Democrats in reducing the nation's dependence on oil gushing into the Gulf of Mexico every day — caused by oil giant BP's negligence," he said, referring to some estimates of the amount of oil rushing into the Gulf.

"In the face of an environmental catastrophe of this magnitude, we hope that even the Grand Oil Party will think twice before standing with the polluters and standing in the way of a clean energy future and new clean energy jobs," Funk said.

As oil continues to gush unabated into the Gulf of Mexico, liberals are seizing the moment to press for energy reform. Some of the partisan debate has to do with capping oil companies' liability for spills (some Republicans want to raise the cap; some Dems want ~~no cap at all~~ it higher). But then there's Americans United for Change's new ad, which will run on cable through May 25 for $50,000, which does the good old-fashioned job of accusing the other side of corruption and pointing out contributions from the oil industry:

Greenwire

Greenwire -- May 20, 2010 Thursday

2 left-leaning groups go on offensive with oil-spill message

SECTION: Gulf Spill Vol. 10 No. 9

Alex Kaplun, E&E reporter

Two left-leaning advocacy groups launched campaigns today aimed at using the Gulf of Mexico oil spill to push for passage of two high-profile legislative initiatives.
Americans United for Change will go on the air today with a 30-second television spot accusing Republican senators of taking millions of dollars in campaign contributions from oil companies and calling on them to support the climate and energy bill sponsored by Democrat John Kerry and independent Joe Lieberman.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The ad features underwater footage of oil belching from the BP PLC well overlaid with pictures of Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) and Sens. Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska) and David Vitter (R-La.).

"Oil isn't just polluting the Gulf, it's polluting our politics," the ad says. "In the last three and a half years, the oil industry has given over $35 million to Republicans."
The ad continues, "Tell Mitch McConnell and the Republicans to stop blocking clean energy and start holding the polluters accountable."

The ad will air into next week on FOX News, CNN and MSNBC broadcasts in Washington, D.C. Americans United for Change was formed in 2005 by Democratic officials and labor interests and has run campaigns for a number of Democratic initiatives, including health care legislation, financial reform and climate legislation.

Will Dems push climate change bill next in wake of Gulf spill, new climate study?

By David O. Williams 5/21/10 9:57 AM

So with what was supposed to be slam-dunk Wall Street reform finally off their plate the Senate will turn to critical climate change legislation next, right?

Comprehensive immigration reform could still jump to the front of the Obama administration legislative agenda line in the wake of Arizona Senate Bill 1070, even though it's clear that highly contentious issue has little chance of passing this session.

But mounting climate change evidence and the ongoing British Petroleum oil spill disaster in the Gulf of Mexico would seem to give Sens. John Kerry and Joe Lieberman's American Power Act a leg up as the next-most-pressing agenda item.

What the New York Times deems the "nation's leading scientific body" – the National Academy of Sciences' National Research Council – this week issued a trio of comprehensive studies showing climate change is indeed happening and that it is caused by man.

The reports recommend immediate action and the adoption of a carbon-pricing system. It also concludes the Kerry-Lieberman bill's target of reducing national carbon dioxide emissions 17 percent below 2005 levels by 2020 is a reasonable goal.

Meanwhile, Americans United for Change recently launched a TV ad campaign skewering Senate Republicans in particular and the GOP in general for taking $35 million in oil and gas money over the last three and half years.

The ad uses brutal imagery of oil continuing to pour into the Gulf and urges Republicans to stop stalling climate change legislation, which the House passed last summer.

To respond to Robby's q's - I do think it will help us get over it. Mostly, we will get style points, which we need. I'm always happy to just concede that it's a real thing and define it as a marginalized strain, which she did do today. I told Reid this, and I suggest it to you as well: you just don't want to be on the slippery slope of sounding like an imam who is defining what true islam is. From a policy perspective, there's a radical strain. Moreover, I like making the Muslim world feel like they need to activate to separate themselves and define themselves (which is happening). By the way, every time Reid has spoken out in defense of Muslims, it has our most popular messaging of anything we do.

Would require advocating for and lifting up progressive leaders in that nation to speak about it/ to do online campaigning around it/etc. We tend to be overly focused on the violent strains of the radicalism. But even if there weren't violence, the fact that too many who are for subjugation of women, against gays, against Jews and Christians, etc – is a serious problem for our future. Unfortunately, if you sounded progressive in the Middle East/Pakistan, you'd be putting yourself at security risk.

John,

National Right to Life, a right-wing group that works to limit women's access to reproductive care, just put Arizona on it's list of "most competitive Senate races in the country."

The good news: It's more validation that we've got John McCain on the run.

The bad news: NRL spends big money in elections. In the past two elections, NRL's associated Super PAC spent more than $1.8 million in federal elections.

And now we know that Ann is on their target list.

We are Ann's best defense against special interest attacks. We need to be ready for anything that gets thrown our way. We need to reach $50,000 in November to build up our strength. If you can, give $5 or more right now to help us out.

Ann's the only person in this race that truly stands with Arizona women. Let's make sure she's ready to win.

Thanks!

Counterterrorism Expert Richard Clarke Comments on New al Qaeda Video

Washington, DC -- The National Security Network today released this statement by Richard Clarke, former National Coordinator for Counter-terrorism on the National Security Council, on the new al Qaeda video.

"The intention and intelligence value of this video at this time is still unclear and we shouldn't jump to conclusions. But we should be mindful that Al Qaeda has attempted to influence elections in the past to magnify the media coverage of their terrorist activities and reminding us they are still around. Even more disturbing is the fact that Abu Yahya al-Libi should never have been able to make this statement in the first place, if the Bush administration had done its job and kept him from escaping Bagram Air Force base."

Please also see recent articles written by Richard Clarke and R.P. Eddy and LAPD Chief William Bratton on this subject.

The National Security Network (NSN) mission is to revitalize America's national security policy, and bring cohesion and strategic focus to the progressive national security community. NSN works with a broad network of experts to identify, develop and communicate progressive national security policy solutions.

Dear Trustees,

I am writing as chair of the 2015-16 nominating committee to invite your thoughts on who might be good candidate to take over the reins of the Facilities and Infrastructure Committee from Mark Kleine. The nominating committee has been asked to bring a nominee to the Board at the October meeting, so we will be arranging to canvass all trustees by phone over the next few weeks. In preparation for that canvass, please let me know soon if you might be interested in serving the College in this capacity, or if there is a specific trustee you think we should be sure to consider. Subject: Summary -- Report on the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Knox College Board of Trustees, September 11, 2015

Dear Trustees,

I'm writing to report on the meeting of the Executive Committee, which was held on Friday, September 11. Laurel will be sending out the minutes of the meeting in the next few weeks, so consider this more of an informal update while the news is fresh.

We began the meeting with Teresa's report on recent developments at the college. Classes started on

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thursday and she reported that early estimates suggest a possible gain of 20 new students this fall (total 418); still too early to know the final retention number. Knox has been rising in the national rankings (e.g., from 81 to 72 in U.S. News and World Report; from 13 to 11 in the Washington Monthly). She learned yesterday that the Mellon Foundation had made a $800,000 gift to the college to support a suite of initiatives designed to strengthen first-generation and low-income students' academic development and educational attainment.

The committee then had the opportunity to discuss the outcome of the August retreat in Chicago, the draft agendas for the board and committee meetings for October, and the board and committee work plans.

I then reported on my research on staff support in the president's office at select peer institutions, and Teresa shared her thoughts on next steps. First step will be to find a strong successor to Denise in the position of executive assistant, and Teresa has a couple of good finalists she is now considering. When we meet in October, I'll brief you on what I learned about other colleges and what additional support we might consider.

The committee then approved the membership for the Nominating Committee for 2015-2016: Dave Schulz, chair; Laurel Andrew, Ellie Hartog, Keith Maskus, and Sue Zucker. This summer, Mark Kleine asked to step down as chair of the Facilities and Infrastructure Committee (he'll remain on the board), so I've asked the Nominating Committee to bring forward one or more nominees for the board to consider at its October meeting. We're all grateful to Mark for the excellent service he's given the college as chair of the Facilities and Infrastructure Committee, and I appreciate him staying on as chair until the October meeting when we'll appoint a new chair to serve for the remainder of the year.

Next, the Executive Committee endorsed the establishment of the Trustee Task Force on Socially Responsible Investing. I'm attaching the charge to the task force. Thanks to Joe Bastian for chairing and to Joe Glossberg, Isabelle Goossen, Jan Koran, Steve Luetger, and Jerry Vovis for agreeing to serve. We look forward to considering a proposal from the task force at the February board meeting.

Finally, Teresa briefed us on two issues related to the Arts Building – the status of fundraising and the construction schedule/costs. As you know, the board voted in June to begin construction when we had raised 90% of the hard costs for the building. Teresa—and Keith—made the case to the Executive Committee that we should begin construction in early October—before the October board meeting. We now have 82% of the funds raised, rather than the required 90%. After hearing the arguments for the administration's request, the committee was persuaded that beginning construction in early October made good sense. We decided to bring this issue to the full board for its review and action at a special telephonic meeting of the board, to be called in September. At that meeting, Teresa and Keith will be asking for an exception to the general practice of having 90% of the funds in hand before construction can begin. Laurel will be in touch with you to announce the time of the meeting and Keith will be sending out detailed information as background for the administration's request.

If you have any questions about the Executive Committee meeting, please let me know.

I look forward to speaking with you by phone soon, and to seeing you on campus in October.

Best,

Richard

As some of you know, we've never formally filed papers for our 501(c)(4). For a variety of reasons, we think it makes sense to finally do that after Election Day. We'll also rename it the "Obama-Biden Transition Project". John has suggested that the five people listed on the incorporation papers will be the five of you. There's nothing you need to do, but the press will obviously get a copy of the legal papers. I just wanted to give you a heads-up in case you have any concerns. (And if it makes any difference, we're getting directors and officers liability insurance for the transition.)

Dear John,

I've got some great news. This morning the New York Times enthusiastically endorsed Kirsten for the Senate, writing:

"Ms. Gillibrand has been a steady voice of reason in Washington, fighting for farmers, battling to retain crucial food stamps. She worked hard to repeal the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy, voted against extending the Bush tax cuts for the wealthy, and has become a strong advocate for women's issues. She was a key sponsor of legislation to end insider trading by members of Congress, and she has spoken out against President Obama's slow withdrawal from Afghanistan."

You can read the whole editorial here .

Thanks so much for all that you do.

Subject:	Scheduling Request: Mid-June Grantees Call

Hello Equitable Growth Steering Committee,

I am writing to schedule a 1-hour call in mid-June to discuss our 2015 cohort of grantees. We have invited full proposals from 39 of the almost 200 letters of inquiry we received in response to our request for proposals – 26 academic proposals and 13 doctoral. We are thrilled with the quality and diversity of projects. Full proposals were due in April and are currently out for external review. Reviews will be compiled and we will complete our internal review process in the coming weeks.

We will make a preliminary decision on awards the first week in June, at which point we will send full proposals to you for your review. The purpose of the call in mid-June will be to discuss the projects and gain your approval on our second cohort of grantees.

Below are the call time slots that we have worked out internally and with the Sandler Foundation. Please do let me know at your earliest convenience which slot(s) are best for you, knowing that we will only use one hour of the time. As soon as we have a quorum, I will send a follow-up confirmation to this email.

June Call Possibilities:

Tuesday June 9
1 hr between 2:30 – 4:30 pm EDT (11:30 am – 1:30 pm PDT)

Wednesday June 10 (Preferred, if possible)
1 hr between 4-6 pm EDT (1-3 pm PDT)

Dial In:

It only takes 50 signatures to raise a resolution on the floor and I have been warned about a Northeastern Sanders contingent. I think it would be good to be organized on our own behalf with a few key folks in the room (NH and IA leaders) in case anything comes up. I am a little nervous about this event. TO: Interested Parties

RE: Abortion and Health Care Reform

As a couple of media stories have noted that abortion may be the next “battle” in health care reform, we wanted to highlight a handful of good articles that separate out the myths from the facts.

Anti-health care reform critics are using misinformation about abortion to try and undermine health care reform. But, a number of independent media sources, including Washington Post, PolitiFact, NPR, LA Times, and Boston Globe, have “factchecked” and rebutted these misleading attacks.

Washington Post: The Next Health Reform Myth
By Ruth Marcus
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2009/09/08/AR2009090802960.html

“You're going to be hearing more of the same. Don't believe it. These inflammatory statements do a disservice to a complex issue of public policy: how, in the context of health reform, to balance the deeply felt views of both sides in the abortion debate….
In the House, an amendment offered by Rep. Lois Capps (D-Calif.) nicely threads these narrow-eyed needles.

With respect to private insurance, the Capps amendment makes clear that companies participating in the exchange cannot be required to include abortion coverage and that plans cannot -- contrary to Boehner's assertion -- discriminate against health providers that decline to provide abortions.

In addition, it requires that the exchanges include at least one plan without abortion coverage -- relieving abortion opponents from worrying that their premiums would be used to pay for abortions -- and one that offers coverage. Although private plans could include abortion coverage, they could not use federal funds for that purpose. Instead, plans that choose to include this coverage could set aside a portion of their private premiums that could then be used to pay for abortion services.”

LA Times editorial: Healthcare reform bill doesn't cover elective abortions http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-ed-health4-2009sep04,0,7271055.story

“Since the Supreme Court's ruling in Roe vs. Wade, every federal health insurance program has become enmeshed in the debate over federal funding for abortion. This year's efforts to reform the healthcare system have triggered a new tussle, with opponents of abortion claiming that the proposals would change the long-standing policy against using federal tax dollars to terminate pregnancies. But the provision that antiabortion groups find so objectionable would actually have the opposite effect, forcing private insurers to go further to fund and account for abortion coverage separately from federally subsidized services….

The Capps amendment isn't a nefarious plan to promote abortions. It's a reasonable compromise.”

Boston Globe: Latest myth on health reform
http://www.boston.com/bostonglobe/editorial_opinion/oped/articles/2009/08/21/latest_myth_on_health_reform/

“Having successfully dispatched the fictional ‘death panels’ from the health reform legislation making its way through Congress, conservative critics are aiming at another mythical target in the bill: ‘abortion mandates.’

Just as opponents twisted voluntary end-of-life discussions into government mandates for euthanasia, so too are abortion services the subject of confusion and disinformation….

Finding common ground on abortion is as elusive as ever, but the House bill makes a good stab at it with a provision that every region in the country must offer insurance plans that cover abortion and plans that don’t. That way, there is a choice for consumers who feel strongly about the issue….

No one wants to see the health care overhaul founder on a single issue. But neither should women’s reproductive health be compromised away in an effort to buy increasingly unlikely bipartisan support. The ‘abortion mandate’ crowd will not be satisfied until the health care system eliminates a safe, legal, medical procedure that trusts women to make the right choices about their own lives.”

Des Moines Register editorial: Don't let abortion debate derail reform
August 11, 2009
http://www.desmoinesregister.com/article/20090811/OPINION03/908110356/-1/SPORTS09

“Mark Twain once said, ‘Get your facts first, then you can distort them how you please.’

Anti-abortion-rights groups either don't have the facts about health-care reform, or they're intentionally distorting them. They are opposing a ‘public option’ for health insurance, saying it would cover abortions. The Associated Press quoted Douglas Johnson, legislative director for National Right to Life, as saying the public plan 'pays for abortion.'

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Wrong….

The truth is this: Many opponents of abortion rights won't accept anything other than a total ban on the medical procedure in this country - even if it means latching on to the health-care-reform legislation to draw attention to their agenda.

The propaganda they're spreading doesn't jibe with the truth about how health-care reform is being crafted in Washington."

NPR: Abortion In The Health Care Bills: What's True?
http://www.npr.org/templates/story/story.php?storyId=111786660

Mr. FARLEY (PolitiFact): Exactly. Studies have shown that somewhere between 45 and 80 percent of the women who have health care coverage through their companies currently get abortion coverage. And so, the argument then is that if the government plan were to disallow that, you would essentially be stripping that coverage from people who already - who currently get that.

MELISSA BLOCK (NPR): Well, when you put the statements that are being made out there through your Truth-O-Meter, as you call it on politifact.com , where do you end up on this question of abortion and plans for heath insurance overhaul?

Mr. FARLEY (PolitiFact): Well, we specifically looked at the question of whether federal tax dollars will be used to subsidize abortions. And that kind of language isn't in any of the versions of the plan that are kicking around in Congress. And specifically, the House version, with the Capps Amendment, states that no federal funds could be used to subsidize abortions. And so we ruled that false.

PolitiFact: FALSE: Boehner says Democrats' health care plan would subsidize abortions http://www.politifact.com/truth-o-meter/statements/2009/aug/07/john-boehner/boehner-says-democrats-health-care-plan-would-lead/

"The fact that several versions of the health care reform bill are floating around Congress makes it difficult to say with certainty what the final plan will or will not include. But while it appears likely the plan would allow for the coverage of abortions, we don't see anything in the plans that would require taxpayers to foot the bill for that.

In fact, in a key version of the bill — the one passed by the House Energy and Commerce Committee — members went to great pains to include an amendment to ensure that federal money is not used for abortion coverage. Again, things could change as the health reform package works its way through Congress, but for now, we don't see anything to support Boehner's claim that taxpayers would subsidize abortions. And so we rule his statement False."

PolitiFact: PANTS ON FIRE: School health clinics would not provide abortions http://www.politifact.com/truth-o-meter/statements/2009/aug/07/liberty-counsel/school-health-clinics-would-not-provide-abortions/

"The Liberty Counsel, a conservative group, puts a different twist on that concern, alleging that Page 992 of the bill 'will establish school-based 'health' clinics. Your children will be indoctrinated and your grandchildren may be aborted!'…

We see no language in the three main versions of the bill that would allow school-based clinics, which have a long history of providing basic health services to underprivileged students, to provide abortions. Nor would the clinics even be new — they have been around for three decades. So we rate the claim Pants on Fire!"

FactCheck.org: Surgery for Seniors vs. Abortions?
http://factcheck.org/2009/07/surgery-for-seniors-vs-abortions/

"In fact, none of the health care overhaul measures that have made it through the committee level in Congress say that abortion will be covered, and one of them explicitly says that no public funds will be used to finance the procedure."

In addition, Planned Parenthood President Cecile Richards has an article on Huffington Post responding to the misleading attacks, and PP's website has a good myth v. reality resource document.

Huffington Post: Misleading Attacks on Women's Health
By Cecile Richards
http://www.huffingtonpost.com/cecile-richards/misleading-attacks-on-wom_b_250093.html

The simple fact is that most women with private insurance in America already have access to full reproductive health care, and the vast majority of employment-based health plans treat abortion coverage like the rest of health care -- as a covered benefit. Understandably, the vast majority of Americans believe that women shouldn't be worse off as a result of health care reform. In fact, a recent poll conducted by the Mellman Group on behalf of the National Women's Law Center found that American voters would oppose a plan that does not include access to comprehensive reproductive health care, including abortion care -- because voters want health care decisions to be made by medical experts, not by members of Congress, and certainly not by the Family Research Council.

Attachments:	Energy Priorities.doc

Don't be fooled the $300 million McCain is proposing for battery research is less than 1/10th the $3.8 billion his tax cuts would give to the top 5 oil companies. Check out our team's research on McCain's real energy priorities.

Speech transcript here: LINK: http://thepage.time.com/transcript-of-mccains-remarks-in-santa-barbara-california/

McCain's Energy Priorities

McCain Proposed A $300 Million Prize For The Development Of A Reliable Battery That Replaces Gasoline In Automobiles. In an energy speech in Fresno, California, John McCain said, "I further propose we inspire the ingenuity and resolve of the American people by offering a $300 million prize for the development of a battery package that has the size, capacity, cost and power to leapfrog the commercially available plug-in hybrids or electric cars. This is one dollar for every man, woman and child in the U.S. – a small price to pay for helping to break the back of our oil dependency – and should deliver a power source at 30 percent of the current costs." [McCain Speech in Fresno, California via Time Magazine, 6/23/08]

McCain's Tax Plan Gives Top Five Oil Companies $3.8 Billion A Year In Tax Breaks. According to a study conducted by the Center for American Progress, "The McCain plan would deliver approximately $170 billion a year in tax cuts to corporations, including some corporations that are very large and profitable. Just one of the proposals—cutting the corporate rate from 35 percent to 25 percent—would cut taxes for five largest U.S. oil companies by $3.8 billion a year." [Center for American Progress, 3/27/08]

Oil and Gas Campaign Contributions: McCain has Taken At Least $1,069,854 from the Oil & Gas Industry. According to a Campaign Money Watch analysis of campaign finance data provided by the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics Center, John McCain has accepted at least $1,069,854 from the oil and gas industry since 1989. Friend,

Well, that was fun.

The Chicago Tribune joint interview between Bruce Rauner and Governor Quinn just wrapped, and one thing was clear:

Bruce Rauner as governor would be disastrous for Illinois.

If you agree, chip in $5 or more today to prevent that from ever happening:

https://www.quinnforillinois.com/stop-rauner

Watching Governor Quinn and Bruce Rauner on the same stage was the perfect reminder of what's at stake in this election -- but it was also a reminder of why we have to win.

56 days to go.

Dear John,

I wanted to make sure you saw the email below.

Tens of thousands of supporters of labor and the environment have already told the EPA that strong methane standards mean safer workplaces, better air quality, more energy savings, and improved public health.

Now it's your turn.

Send a comment to the EPA today, and share this message with five friends to encourage them to advocate for these standards!

Dear John,

Last month, the EPA proposed new standards to significantly reduce natural gas leaks. This is a win-win for workers and the environment.

Tell the EPA now to support strong national methane standards that will reduce waste and support good jobs in communities across the United States.

Here's the story:

The U.S. consumes approximately 25 trillion cubic feet of natural gas annually. Losses and leaks throughout the energy sector are all over the map, wasting energy and threatening our air quality. America could heat an estimated 6 million homes each year with the natural gas lost through leaks, outdated equipment and industrial practices. These leaks also contribute to climate change—pound for pound methane in natural gas is 25 times as potent as carbon dioxide.

Last month, the EPA proposed standards to help reduce methane leaks from new and modified sources that process and transport natural gas. This will ensure we deploy technologies and practices to reduce this pollution and hold the energy sector accountable. Stronger standards would recoup more benefits from improved air quality, energy savings, and better public health than the low cost of energy sector investment.

Send a comment to the EPA today urging them to finalize these commonsense methane standards!

The Environmental Defense Fund (EDF) says that industry could cut methane emissions by 40 percent below projected 2018 levels at an average annual cost of less than one penny per thousand cubic feet of produced natural gas.

Low-cost solutions already exist to plug industrial gas leaks and power more homes and businesses, but 99 percent of the industry has failed to adopt these safeguards for years!

We can't afford to wait any longer. Please send a comment to the EPA today to advocate for strong methane standards that will protect workers and communities.

Sincerely,

Rob McCulloch

At least Tanden I regard as a serious person. Sid and Lanny I do not by standards of a secretary of state or potential president.

I guarantee that based on direct personal knowledge of Tom's views and actions at the time. Blumenthal did not have the slightest idea of what he was talking about in his girlie gossip with the secretary of state about this. Why she places such great stock over so much time in these exchanges with Blumenthal is mystifying to me---and frankly troublesome.

Amy Goodman | NYPD Officer Speaks Out on Fellow Cops Who Turned Backs to Mayor and Why People of Color Fear Police

Amy Goodman, Democracy Now!: NYPD officer Adhyl Polanco says those who have shunned New York Mayor Bill de Blasio do not represent the feelings held by many police officers. Polanco previously blew the whistle on superiors who told officers to meet a quota under "stop-and-frisk" or face punishment.

Subject: For Review: HRC speech in Canada

All, tomorrow HRC is giving two open press speeches in Canada with publicly-ticketed general audiences. I'd love your thoughts on the draft, attached and below. Except for some local color, the idea is to use the same speech in both cities. As you'll see, I'm proposing a speech about our shared struggle against violent extremism in the wake of the Paris attacks (and Ottawa in October), with particular emphasis on how important it is for democracies like the United States and Canada to be strong, inclusive, and prosperous at home and not give in to division and demagoguery. The theme of making sure every American has a stake in our prosperity and our democracy is something HRC and WJC are both thinking about a lot these days, so this is a chance to begin playing with some related ideas. This also feels like an interesting way to connect a domestic agenda to international concerns and HRC's SecState record.
Please take a look and send me any thoughts or concerns. HRC is eager to read a draft herself so I'll be sharing with her later this afternoon.
Thanks very much.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON
REMARKS TO GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE LEADERSHIP LUNCHEON
WINNIPEG, CANADA
10/15/2016

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thank you, Winnipeg! Thank you Gary, Victor, and everyone at CIBC.

I'm delighted to be here in the "The Peg." I know sometimes you're called the "Chicago of the North." Well, as someone who grew up in the "Winnipeg of the South," let me just say, I feel right at home.

In fact, that's how I feel whenever I come to Canada. Our two countries have so much in common. No two nations in the world are closer. No border is longer or more peaceful. No one trades more. Or shares more core values.

Canada and the United States are strongest when we're standing side-by-side.

You can see it right here in Manitoba, where plans to link your hydro electricity with wind power produced in Minnesota hold the potential to reduce costs and increase use of clean energy on both sides of the border.

You can see it in the courageous efforts of Canadian and American doctors and aid workers to bring help and hope to Ebola-ravaged West Africa.

In so many ways, in so many places, the alliance between our two countries and the broader community of democracies remains a cornerstone of peace, prosperity, and progress.

Today, that's as important and urgent as ever.

The recent terrorist attacks in Paris, and the foiled plot in Brussels, are stark reminders of the threats we face together. In the brutal burst of automatic gunfire we heard the echoes of Boston, London, Madrid, and so many others.

It was only three months ago that Ottawa was targeted. Canadians pulled together then, just as Parisians and people across Europe and the world are doing now. Here in Winnipeg, that very night, you went to the polls and elected your first-ever Métis [May-TEES] mayor. Regardless of politics, it was a statement about the values of pluralism and openness that define our democracies.

Those were the same values under assault in Paris.

The slaughter of satirists and Jews sharpened the true contours of this struggle. It is not just a matter of law enforcement or military action. We are in a contest of ideas.

Now, let's be clear: Islam itself is not the adversary. The vast majority of Muslims are peaceful and tolerant people. We see that everyday in Canada and the United States, with so many of our neighbors and fellow citizens.

But we can't close our eyes to the fact that there is a distorted and dangerous strain of extremism within the Muslim world that continues to spread. Its adherents are few in number, but they are causing profound damage – most especially to their own communities.

With these vicious few, we are confronting an ideology of hate. A worldview based on tearing down and dividing rather than building up and bringing together. The claim to absolute truth. Total intolerance for the beliefs and rights of others.

Like previous ideological struggles, this is a generational challenge. And it must be waged on many fronts.

First, we have to craft our strategy in the Middle East with an eye to this battle of ideas.

Canada, the United States and many other nations are working together to stop the spread of ISIS and other violent extremists in the region. These militants are targeting religious and ethnic minorities, kidnapping and beheading civilians, persecuting women, and attracting foreign fighters, including some with Western passports who could easily return home.

This fight is crucial. And more broadly, we have to do everything we can to empower moderates and marginalize extremists throughout the Middle East and the wider Muslim world.

It's no coincidence that the places where minorities are persecuted and dissent is forbidden make fertile ground for radicalism.

It's also no coincidence that the women's lives aren't valued or their rights respected tend to be sources of conflict and instability.

Too often concerns about these issues are dismissed as soft or second-tier. But they're at the heart of this challenge.

Second, we have to be smart about how we defend ourselves and go after terrorists. In addition to robust military and law enforcement actions, we also need to target terrorist financing, recruitment, and propaganda. That requires close international cooperation. And as Secretary of State, I worked hard with Canada and others to build up a network of global counterterrorism collaboration.

We also have to do a better job contesting online space, including websites and chat rooms where extremists inspire and recruit followers. I'm proud of the work we've begun in this area, but there's a lot more to do, as we can see from the success that ISIS continues to have online.

Third, and this is the point I really want to emphasize today, we have to show the world that free people and free markets are still the hope of humanity.

The great democracies have to set an example. Standing up for our values in our own countries and communities is just as crucial as promoting them abroad.

And today there are many forces tugging at the fabric of our societies. Demagogues who play on fears of immigrants and minorities. Economic stagnation that hollows out communities and puts the dream of upward mobility out of reach for too many families. Deep frustrations that erode trust in our leaders, our institutions, even our neighbors.

We can't give in to these forces of entropy. We have to go back to first principles. The values written into our democratic DNA. Freedom. Equality. Opportunity. Pluralism.

We have to remember that whatever our differences, we're all in this together. For our democracies to meet the tests ahead, all our people have to believe they have a stake in our prosperity and our future -- no matter where they're from, what they look like, how they worship, or who they love.

In the United States, we recently lost one of our wisest political sages, Mario Cuomo. He used to talk about the nation as a family. The "family of America." We are all bound one to another, he said, and everyone needs a seat at the table. That's democracy.

Now, as a new grandmother, I like that idea quite a lot. Because ever child should have the same opportunities in life as my baby granddaughter.

In the United States, that's what we call the American Dream. But it really is a universal dream. It's what's always drawn people to our shores -- dreamers and dissidents and anyone willing to work hard to build a better life. Canada and the United States are both nations built by immigrants and energized by diversity.

It hasn't always been easy or smooth, but at our best, we welcome everyone into the family. We expand the circle of opportunity and equality wider and wider. We make room at the table.

But today, across the world's great democracies, we're grappling with difficult questions that cut to the core of this promise.

Can we relearn how to work together… and grow together?

How do we make sure that new waves of immigrants enrich rather than embitter our communities?

What will it take to give our young people the opportunities they need and deserve?

As we answer these questions, there's a lot we can learn from each other.

Here in Canada, you've shown that the economic inequality that we see in the United States and many other countries isn't inevitable -- despite facing similar long-term challenges from globalization and automation. You've invested in your middle class and it's made a real difference.

Last night, President Obama offered a vision for helping the middle class in the United States reclaim its seat at the table. The proposals he offered are an important start. And there is so much more to do -- to bring a sense of security and possibility to families struggling with stagnant wages and sinking hopes… to restore sanity and balance to our politics… reform our broken immigration system… and re-stitch the fraying fabric of American life.

The debates are different in each nation, but our fundamental goals are the same. And everything I've seen and done around the world has convinced me that the future belongs to vibrant democracies like ours.

Despite our many challenges, we are uniquely prepared to continue leading in the 21st century, just as we did in the 20th.

You and I are fortunate to live in remarkably resilient and resourceful countries. And the things that make us who we are as Americans and Canadians – our diverse and open societies, our devotion to human rights and democratic values – give us a singular advantage in our increasingly interconnected and interdependent world.

Extremism, authoritarianism, Putinism – none of them can compete with democracy at its best.

That's what we saw on the streets of Paris in the wake of the attacks as millions of people came together in solidarity.

And there was no better symbol of the spirit of Paris than the young Muslim immigrant named Lassana [phonetics] who worked at the kosher market and risked his life to protect his Jewish customers. He said the market had become a new home and his colleagues and customers a "second family."

When the terrorist arrived and the gunfire began, Lassana moved quickly, hiding as many people as he could in the cold storage room and slipping out to help the police.

"I didn't know or care if they were Jews or Christians or Muslims," he said afterwards. "We're all in the same boat."

What a rebuke to the extremists' hate.

The French government is now granting Lassana full citizenship. But when it mattered most, he proved he was a citizen already.

That's the power of an open society.

That's why the future is ours -- if we come together and live our values.

Thank you.

Perfect, thanks! Just emailed him. Next week's dates are no good for sure. I'm avoiding the 22nd because I know your family is coming in that night. Theoretically Sunday the 20th (day after the debate) OR Monday the 21st could work. But I know there's a potential HRC meeting floating around on the 21st, which could mean meetings on Sunday evening.

Let me know if you think Sunday or Monday would be better.

Did you want me reach out to Jake to gauge his availability for those nights? I do know he's not usually in town Sunday/Monday as he also teaches class Monday nights, but can check.

Mr. Podesta,

It was a pleasure to bump into you as I was exiting CAP on Friday. Sorry again that I interrupted your phone call.

As we discussed briefly, I am writing a bipartisan report on best practices in the processes for national security decision making. To inform our conclusions we have conducted interviews with dozens of leading practitioners, including members of the Principals and Deputies Committees across the last five administrations. A former letter requesting an interview is attached.

I very much appreciate your willingness to meet with us on this. We would like to record the interview only to allow us to produce an accurate transcript; after that the recording will be deleted. We would then send you the transcript to give you an opportunity to edit or amend any of your comments. If you would like to move any quotes to “background” after the fact that is fine with us as well. Please let us know when you might be available for an interview. We can do it in DC or in NYC if that is more convenient for you.

And most importantly — congratulations on the big wins yesterday!

Best regards,
Will

CNN Refusing To Run Ad Critical Of Insurance Industry

What on earth is going on at CNN?

The network — already taking criticism for declining to run an ad criticizing Lou Dobbs — is now refusing to run an ad nationally criticizing the insurance industry, the group that tried to place the ad tells me.

CNN's reason: The ad "unnecessarily" singles out a top insurance industry executive by name for criticism.

The labor-backed Americans United for Change, a top White House ally in the health care wars, tried to book time on CNN and MSNBC for the ad, which hits the insurance industry for wanting to preserve the status quo and levels harsh criticism at insurance giant Cigna's CEO, Ed Hanway.

"Why do insurance companies and Republicans want to kill health insurance reform? Because they like things the way they are now," the ad says, and then slams Hanway's annual salary of over $12 million and golden parachute retirement package of over $70 million.

Americans United for Change's spokesman, Jeremy Funk, tells me that CNN refused to run the ad nationally. He says CNN emailed the following reason for rejection:

"This ad does not comply with our clearance guidelines because it unnecessarily singles out an individual company and person."

That very well may be CNN's policy. But AUC maintains that the mention of Cigna's CEO was necessary to dramatize the enormous stake the insurance industry has in the health care wars. What's more, AUC argues, the industry is made up of companies that are run by individuals spending huge money to impact the health care debate — so why are they off limits?

"The bottom line question is: Would CNN run ads from Cigna that are positive about the company?" Funk asks. "If yes, why would they turn down an ad critical of the company for their role in trying to kill health insurance reform?"

By contrast, the ad will air nationally on MSNBC tomorrow. Here's the spot:

CBS' Evening News: Reported that there was classified information on HRC's private emails; the matter has now been turned over to the FBI; HRC, at her campaign event, denied any wrongdoing; the inspector general wrote to Congress saying that there are potentially hundreds of classified emails on the server; HRC said that no emails were classified at the time they were sent; the inspector general did say today that no emails were classified at the time that HRC sent them, but did in fact contain classified information when they were generated; DOJ has not said if they are going to investigate.

ABC's World News Tonight: Coverage of HRC emails. Jonathan Karl reports HRC ignored questions about calls for the FBI to investigate the handling of classified information on the private e-mail account she used as secretary of state. Says HRC has been emphatic in her denials. Shows clip of HRC saying there was no classified information in her emails. Says internal investigators for the intelligence community say at least four of HRC's e-mails and potentially hundreds more included classified national security information at the time they were sent. Shows clip of HRC saying she has said repeatedly that she will answer questions before the house committee and we are all accountable to the American people to get the facts right. Karl says investigators have not suggested anything criminal and have not called on the FBI to investigate HRC herself. Says what they're most worried about is that there is still classified information out there, some of it on a thumb drive in the office of HRC's private attorney.

NBC's Nightly News: Lester Holt reported on HRC's email controversy. Justice Department is considering a request on whether or not classified information was relied in her private email account. Kristen Welker claimed that HRC was downplaying the email scandal. HRC dodged the issue at hand. Inspectors general requested the inquiry because they were concerned that there were a number of emails that were classified. HRC's campaign reacted by claiming that HRC's campaign claimed that the emails were categorized as classified after they had been sent out, not before. Chuck Todd claimed that HRC dodged a bullet legally, but that this issue would bite the campaign politically throughout the presidential race.
Kelly O'Donnell reported on Ted Cruz accusing Mitch McConnell of lying. Cruz claimed that McConnell had lied about legislation that Conservatives had opposed. Cruz claimed that he lied to Republican senators and to the press. McConnell has not responded.

Mr. Podesta -

I've been a democratic lobbyist in DC going on 10 years (I believe you may recall my father, Sante Esposito). I currently represent Polk County, Iowa (which includes Des Moines), which I have had as a client for the last 5 years. I am extremely close with the supervisors, and other electeds, who I believe could significantly help early in Iowa. I understand that efforts to put together the campaign are in the early stage but I would like to offer my assistance.

But we remain perplexed by the Times' slowness to acknowledge its errors after the fact, and some of the shaky justifications that Times' editors. We feel it important to outline these concerns with you directly so that they may be properly addressed and so our campaign can continue to have a productive, working relationship with the Times.
>> I feel obliged to put into context just how egregious an error this story was. The New York Times is arguably the most important news outlet in the world and it rushed to put an erroneous story on the front page charging that a major candidate for President of the United States was the target of a criminal referral to federal law enforcement. Literally hundreds of outlets followed your story creating a firestorm that instilled real damage on our campaign that can never be undone. This problem was compounded by the fact that the Times took an inexplicable, let alone indefensible, delay in correcting the story and removing "criminal" from the headline and text of the story.
>> To review the facts, as the Times itself has acknowledged through multiple corrections, the paper's reporting was false in several key respects: first, contrary to what the Times stated, Mrs. Clinton is not the target of a criminal referral made by the State Department's and Intelligence Community's Inspector Generals, and second, the referral in question was not of a criminal nature at all.
>> Just as disturbing as the errors themselves is the Times' apparent abandonment of standard journalistic practices in the course of its reporting on this story.
>>> First, the seriousness of the allegations that the Times rushed to report last Thursday evening demanded far more care and due diligence than the Times exhibited prior to this article's publication.

To state the obvious, it is hard to imagine a situation more fitting for those standards to be applied than when a newspaper is preparing to allege that a major party candidate for President of the United States is the target of a criminal referral received by federal law enforcement.
>> This allegation, however, was reported hastily and without affording the campaign adequate opportunity to respond. It was not even mentioned by your reporter when our campaign was first contacted late Thursday afternoon. Initially, it was stated as reporting only on a memo – provided to Congress by the Inspectors General from the State Department and Intelligence Community – that raised the possibility of classified material traversing Secretary Clinton's email system. This memo –which was subsequently released publicly -- did not reference a criminal referral at all. It was not until late Thursday night – at 8:36 pm – that your paper hurriedly followed up with our staff to explain that it had received a separate tip that the inspectors general had additionally made a criminal referral to the Justice Department concerning Clinton's email use. Our staff indicated that we had no knowledge of any such referral – understandably, of course, since none actually existed – and further indicated that, for a variety of reasons, the reporter's allegation seemed implausible. Our campaign declined any immediate comment, but asked for additional time to attempt to investigate the allegation raised. In response, it was indicated that the campaign "had time," suggesting the publication of the report was not imminent.

Despite the late hour, our campaign quickly conferred and confirmed that we had no knowledge whatsoever of any criminal referral involving the Secretary. At 10:36 pm, our staff attempted to reach your reporters on the phone to reiterate this fact and ensure the paper would not be going forward with any such report. There was no answer. At 10:54 pm, our staff again attempted calling. Again, no answer. Minutes later, we received a call back. We sought to confirm that no story was imminent and were shocked at the reply: the story had just published on the Times' website.

This was, to put it mildly, an egregious breach of the process that should occur when a major newspaper like the Times is pursuing a story of this magnitude. Not only did the Times fail to engage in a proper discussion with the campaign ahead of publication; given the exceedingly short window of time between when the Times received the tip and rushed to publish, it hardly seems possible that the Times conducted sufficient deliberations within its own ranks before going ahead with the story.

Second, in its rush to publish what it clearly viewed as a major scoop, the Times relied on questionable sourcing and went ahead without bothering to seek corroborating evidence that could have supported its allegation.

In our conversations with the Times reporters, it was clear that they had not personally reviewed the IG's referral that they falsely described as both criminal and focused Hillary Clinton. Instead, they relied on unnamed sources that characterized the referral as such. However, it is not at all clear that those sources had directly seen the referral, either. This should have represented too many "degrees of separation" for any newspaper to consider it reliable sourcing, least of all the New York Times.

Times' editors have attempted to explain these errors by claiming the fault for the misreporting resided with a Justice Department official whom other news outlets cited as confirming the Times' report after the fact. This suggestion does not add up. It is our understanding that this Justice Department official was not the original source of the Times' tip. Moreover, notwithstanding the official's inaccurate characterization of the referral as criminal in nature, this official does not appear to have told the Times that Mrs. Clinton was the target of that referral, as the paper falsely reported in its original story.

This raises the question of what other sources the Times may have relied on in for its initial report. It clearly was not either of the referring officials – that is, the inspectors general of either the State Department or intelligence agencies – since the Times' sources apparently lacked firsthand knowledge of the referral documents. It also seems unlikely the source could have been anyone affiliated with those offices, as it defies logic that anyone so closely involved could have so severely garbled the description of the referral.

Of course, the identity of the Times' sources would be deserving of far less scrutiny if the underlying information had been confirmed as true. However, the Times appears to have performed little, if any, work to corroborate the accuracy of its sources' characterizations of the IG's referral. Key details went uninvestigated in the Times' race to publish these erroneous allegations against Mrs. Clinton. For instance, high in the Times' initial story, the reporters acknowledged they had no knowledge of whether the documents that the Times claimed were mishandled by Mrs. Clinton contained any classified markings. In Mrs. Clinton's case, none of the emails at issue were marked. This fact was quickly acknowledged by the IC inspector general's office within hours of the Times' report, but it was somehow left unaddressed in the initial story.

Even after the Times' reporting was revealed to be false, the Times incomprehensibly delayed the issuance of a full and true correction.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Our campaign first sought changes from the Times as soon as the initial story was published. Recognizing the implausibility that Clinton herself could be the subject of any criminal probe, we immediately challenged the story's opening line, which said the referral sought an investigation into Mrs. Clinton specifically for the mishandling of classified materials. In response, the Times' reporters admitted that they themselves had never seen the IG's referral, and so acknowledged the possibility that it was overstating what it directly knew when it portrayed the potential investigation as centering on Mrs. Clinton. It corrected the lead sentence accordingly.

The speed with which the Times conceded that it could not defend its lead citing Mrs. Clinton as the referral's target raises questions about what inspired its confidence in the first place to frame the story that way. More importantly, the Times' change was not denoted in the form of a correction. Rather, it was performed quietly, overnight, without any accompanying note to readers. This was troubling in its lack of transparency and risks causing the Times to appear like it is trying to whitewash its misreporting. A correction should have been posted promptly that night.

Regardless, even after this change, a second error remained in the story: the characterization of the referral as criminal at all. By Friday morning, multiple members of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform (who had been briefed by the inspectors general) challenged this portrayal—and ultimately, so did the Department of Justice itself. Only then did the Times finally print a correction acknowledging its misstatement of the nature of the referral to the Justice Department.

Of course, the correction, coming as it did on a Friday afternoon, was destined to reach a fraction of those who read the Times' original, erroneous report. As the Huffington Post observed:

> "...it's unlikely that the same audience will see the updated version unless the paper were to send out a second breaking news email with its latest revisions. The Clinton story also appeared the front page of Friday's print edition."

Most maddening of all, even after the correction fixed the description of the referral within the story, a headline remained on the front page of the Times' website that read "Criminal Inquiry is Sought in Clinton Email Account." It was not until even later in the evening that the word "criminal" was finally dropped from the headline and an updated correction was issued to the story. The lateness of this second correction, however, prevented it from appearing in the paper this morning. We simply do not understand how that was allowed to occur.

Lastly, the Times' official explanations for the misreporting is profoundly unsettling.

In a statement to the Times' public editor, you said that the errors in the Times' story Thursday night were "unavoidable." This is hard to accept. As noted above, the Justice Department official that incorrectly confirmed the Times' initial reports for other outlets does not appear to have been the initial source for the Times. Moreover, it is precisely because some individuals may provide erroneous information that it is important for the Times to sift the good information from the bad, and where there is doubt, insist on additional evidence. The Times was under no obligation to go forward on a story containing such explosive allegations coming only from sources who refused to be named. If nothing else, the Times could have allowed the campaign more time to understand the allegation being engaged. Unfortunately, the Times chose to take none of these steps.

In closing, I wish to emphasize our genuine wish to have a constructive relationship with The New York Times. But we also are extremely troubled by the events that went into this erroneous report, and will be looking forward to discussing our concerns related to this incident so we can have confidence that it is not repeated in the future.

Sincerely,

John,

It's been a while. I hope that you, Mary and your family are well. I also hope you are enjoying the new gig. So much for slowing down, huh?

Nick and I are well. We traveled between DC and Tampa for a while before moving down about a year ago. My mom is doing pretty well, but has slowed down a bit and my sister is busy with two teenagers. Being here to help them out and spend more time with my niece and nephew was a good decision. And, spending the winter here was a big plus.

Nick is working for a small labor/employment firm representing mostly teachers and plumbers. It's a great job -- he is learning a lot and gaining good experience.

My goal is to open a small business. I'm not quite ready to make it happen, but getting closer. In the meantime, I would like to get back to work. I am hoping to find something that allows me to get involved in the community working with a childrens' organization or doing voter registration/protection work.

I had my first real interview since 2005. I was a little rusty, but it went pretty well. It is a short term position with Project Vote working as Voter Registration Deputy Field Director. You may be familiar with them. I know you'll tell me if you think I should or shouldn't work for them and would appreciate your opinion. If you agree that it is a good opportunity, I would also ask for your recommendation. Please let me know if it's okay to have them contact you and the best way for them to do that.

It's fun to hear about the growing list of CAP couples getting hitched. Maybe we will meet on the dance floor at a wedding down the road.

Thanks John.

John --

A few weeks ago, I won the special election to fill a Congressional seat that had been in Republican hands for years. And one of the people I need to thank for that victory is Senator Kirsten Gillibrand.

Kirsten was one of the first to speak out on my behalf. From day one, she expressed an unwavering belief in my campaign.

Now it's my turn to speak up for Kirsten. I've watched Kirsten become one of our most effective leaders in the Senate. She's fought the extreme right wing as they've tried to dismantle Medicare, line the pockets of Big Oil and take away the rights of women.

We need Kirsten in the Senate, but the GOP is determined to grab her seat. By giving to Kirsten's campaign today, you can help her gather the resources she needs to defend herself against the GOP attacks that are sure to come her way.

Click here to make a donation of $250, $500 or more to Kirsten's campaign and help her reach her goal of raising $100,000 by June 30. We simply can't lose Kirsten's strong voice in the Senate.

I'm fresh off the campaign trail, so I know better than anyone what the Republicans have in store for Kirsten. My race became a national issue, so the GOP spent millions trying to defeat me. Unfortunately, Kirsten will have to deal with the same thing.

But if there's anyone who can handle attacks from the right, it's Kirsten. I saw her in action when she campaigned for me and marveled at her strength and stamina. Still, she can't do this alone, which is why I'm coming to you today.

Kirsten is lucky to have such a loyal group of grassroots supporters behind her. She needs you now to stand up for her and make a contribution to her campaign so that she's ready for the Republican onslaught. Can she count on you to help her reach this critical goal of raising $100,000 by June 30?

Click here to rush your contribution to Kirsten's campaign today so she can raise $100,000 before the June 30 deadline. She's counting on her grassroots supporters to help her once again.

There's no doubt in my mind that Kirsten was a driving force in my victory last month. I hope that I can do my part to help her win in 2012.

Sincerely,

Rep. Kathy Hochul

Realizing Jen is making edits presently, I have three flags:

1. I also dislike the current reference to her 2007 Blackberry. As written, it seems like a strained attempt to make her seem relatable. If the point of it is to say that she was used to having only one email when she was a senator, and simply wanted to continue that arrangement when she became Secretary, then the Blackberry reference would make sense bc it would help explain how she made this decision in the first place. But it needs to be rewritten to be understood that way.

2. This line - "This process of looking backwards to see if something should have been classified at the time is fine" - is problematic. We should not think it is fine to find something that "should have been classified at the time." Our position is that no such material exists, else it could be said she mishandled classified info. We need to clarify to make clear we mean that it is fine to perform redactions today, but in doing so it doesnt mean that the material was classified at the time it was sent.

3. In this line - "Some will be serious, some will be personal or mundane" - the word "serious" reads ominously/ suggestive of wrongdoing. I would say something like "some will give a real window into the day-to-day workings of the State Department..."

Hello. I'm sure you are hearing a lot about my emails when I was Secretary of State. So I want to take some time to try and explain what's going on to you directly, in one place, at one time, as best as I can.

In 2007, when I was a U.S. Senator, I got my first Blackberry. I used it to keep up with the news, with friends & family - like anyone else.

When President Obama asked me to serve as Secretary of State, it seemed simpler to have just one email address. After all, my predecessors at State had not relied on Department email. In hindsight, though, this has proven anything but simple. There's a difference between what we are allowed to do and what's smart to do. I shouldn't have used separate personal and government accounts. I should have set a standard that others were expected to meet. To do it all again, I would have used two email addresses.

But I can't do it all again. I can only tell you it was a mistake, regret it, explain it, and help the State Department and others fix any challenges it caused.

That's what I did. Now I want to explain what I didn't do.

I didn't keep my email secret. Whenever I emailed, it was from my address. Whenever people emailed me, it was to my account. Work, personal, whatever.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I also didn't do this to skirt rules. And I didn't do it to avoid having my records preserved. When the State Department asked former Secretaries of State who served since email was widely used to help fill out the archival record, I did so, printing 55,000 pages of email including anything related to my work at the State Department. To get a sense of how outdated some of the government's archiving practices are, we had to print all 55,000 pages because that's what the rules demand. Believe me, printing more than 30,000 email instead of handing them over electronically isn't something anyone does by choice.

That's 30,000 more emails than every other former Secretary produced combined. No one else has produced their emails so far. I'm the only one.

And yes, there were 30,000 more messages that were completely personal and had nothing to do with official business.

I do believe transparency in government is important. And by this point, there isn't much you don't know about me. My finances are out there. My medical history is out there. You know how much I've made, where I've gone, what I'm allergic to.

Now I want to address the most serious aspect.

When it came to classified information, I certainly never used my Blackberry. And that had nothing to do with using a personal email address. If I had been hillaryclinton@state.gov I could not have used it for classified information either. At the State Department, mobile devices aren't used to communicate secrets. Almost everything of a classified nature was presented to me via paper or in person. When I traveled, elaborate steps were taken. Secure phones were set up, secure tents were constructed. I took my responsibilities in safeguarding our nation's secrets seriously. So did my team did. Everyone at the State Department did .

This process of looking backwards to see if something should have been classified at the time is fine. I don't want anything released to the public that puts us at risk. And we're all learning that different agencies have very different views and procedures about what should be classified and what shouldn't.

As Secretary I was proud of what we accomplished. I was proud of the thousands of people who've dedicated themselves to public service - including those who came into State with me and left with me. I was proud of them then, I'm proud of them now.

After nearly a year of offering to come to testify to Congress at any time and anyplace, in October I'll be on Capitol Hill before the committee looking at the tragic events of September 2012 in Benghazi, Libya. They wanted to talk to me behind closed doors, but I insisted on all of you being able to see what I was asked and how I answered.

I'm sure this issue will come up. It's unclear to me how it will help us understand what happened in Benghazi or how to help prevent future tragedies - but I'm going to do my best to answer whatever they ask.

And while I can't predict the future, let me finish by taking a stab:

- There will be many more emails to pour through.
- Some will be serious, some will be personal or mundane.
- You know I'm not great with a fax, but you're also going to learn my secret salad dressing recipe and who sent me LinkedIn requests. (And whose I didn't accept!)

But when the State Department finishes releasing all my emails, you will be able to see them all and judge for yourself.

Which is how it's supposed to work.

If you've made it this far, thank you for watching. And please spread the word to your friends and family.

Hello. I thought you might find it useful to have some answers to share with your friends if they ask about all these news stories out there about my email habits when I was Secretary of State. So I want to take some time to try and explain it to you directly, in one place, at one time, as best as I can.

Please bear with me because parts are confusing, and like many of you, I don't understand all of the technological aspects. [But when you hear all the facts, I think you'll agree that all the political noise over this issue is just that – political noise.]

In 2007, when I was a U.S. Senator, I got my first Blackberry. I used it to keep up with the news, with friends & family - and yes, I also got my fair share of unsolicited forwards that sometimes made me laugh and sometimes made me want to throw it away. In short, I used email like most people.

Fast forward to 2009. One of my husband's staff members bought the domain name clintonemail.com so his team could switch from the various email providers they were relying on to one consolidated system. I joined them.

This was all before I started my new job as Secretary of State. Had President Obama not asked me to join his team, if I had stayed in the U.S. Senate, I still would have switched to this new email.

And when I did get to State, it seemed simpler to have just the one address. After all, my predecessors at State had not relied on Department email. In hindsight, though, this has proven anything but simple.

That's the explanation - but it's no excuse. There's a difference between allowed to do and smart to do. I shouldn't have done it this way. I should have set the standard that others were expected to meet. To do it all again, I would have used two email addresses.

But I can't do it all again. I can only tell you it was a mistake, regret it, explain it, and help State and others fix any challenges it caused.

That's what I did. Now I want to explain what I didn't do.

I didn't keep my email secret. Whenever I emailed, it was from my address. Whenever people emailed me, it was to my account. Work, personal, whatever. And yes, I continued to get my fair share of unsolicited forwards.

I also didn't do this to skirt rules. And I didn't do it to avoid having my records preserved. When State asked former Secretaries of State who served in the era of electronic communications to help fill out the archival record, I did so, printing 55,000

But what wasn't work wasn't the government's business. So I didn't keep those emails. I didn't print them. I knew no matter what I decided to do with them, I was in for criticism. So I chose to keep a modicum of privacy. I hope you can understand that.

Now I want to address the most serious aspect.

When it came to classified information, I certainly never used my Blackberry. And that had nothing to do with using a personal email address. If I had been hillaryclinton@state.gov I could not have used it for classified information either. At the State Department, mobile devices aren't used to communicate secrets. Almost everything of a classified nature was presented to me via paper or in person. When I traveled, elaborate steps were taken. Secure phones were set up, secure tents were constructed. More than once when a tent was set up in some far-away hotel, I was told to read the classified material with the blanket over my head. No, that's not a joke. I took my responsibilities in safeguarding our nation's secrets seriously. So did my team did. Everyone at the State Department did .

This process of looking backwards to see if something should have been classified at the time is fine. I don't want anything released to the public that puts us at risk. And we're all learning that different agencies have very different views and procedures about what should be classified and what shouldn't. What's not fine is to criticize people – especially career officials who have devoted their lives to serving our country -- for handling what they didn't know might be deemed classified years later by another part of the government. That's an impossible standard to meet. Members of Congress and their staff also handled some of these messages. Some articles being written about this issue today contain classified information. Should someone sending that article to a colleague be told in 2020 that they broke the rules? I hope not.

As for the security of my email, in more than a little bit of irony, every day we learn of a new hack by the Chinese, by the Russians. That millions of Americans' personal information has been stolen.

As Secretary I was proud of what we accomplished. I was proud of the thousands of people who've dedicated themselves to public service - including those who came into State with me and left with me. I was proud of them then, I'm proud of them now.

I wish that a video was enough to address this. I know it isn't though. But I wanted to try to put everything in one place.

Along those lines, after nearly a year of offering to come up at any time anyplace, in October I'll be on Capitol Hill before the committee looking at the tragic events of September 2012 in Benghazi, Libya. They wanted to talk to me behind closed doors, but I insisted on all of you being able to see what I was asked and how I answered.

• There will be many more email to pour through.

• Some will be serious, some will be embarrassing.

• You know I'm not great with a fax, but you're also going to learn my secret salad dressing recipe and who sent me LinkedIn requests. (And whose I didn't accept!)

• There will be more dramatic leaks and assertions that prove to be untrue.

But at some point, you're going to have them all. And if you suffer through all 55,000 pages, you'll be able to judge for yourself.

Which is how it's supposed to work.

Hi Mr. Podesta,

Hope you're doing well. I apologize, I've owed you an email about my semester paper for a while now, but I've been swamped with very early deadlines for all of my other classes.

I'm having a little issue. We came up with a topic involving the GAO and ways that it could more proactively induce efficiency in government (IT acquisition, etc.). I've looked into what's been done on this issue, including what Rep. Ryan and others have been talking about, but I'm a little concerned that there's not enough for a paper. Maybe I'm off on the wrong track? Any tips you have would be great. Or perhaps we could meet next week? I'm sure you're pretty busy these days (electing the next leader of the free world and all), so maybe right before or after class on Monday? Whatever works for you, I'm flexible.

Thank you,
Matt

John, I just hung up the phone with Debbie Stabenow who agrees completely with my analysis. You may want to speak to her as well, but I think it would serve our candidate for you and me to have a conversation about this asap for there are several complex factors that will be more easily explained by phone. Can we talk first thing (I am on the west coast) tomorrow morning?

If not, and for now, I will try to summarize here:

* The reasons that Debbie needs to keep trying to advance a compromise to Roberts are (a) his bill contains some real conflicts with the Organic Food Production Act and current National Organic Program that would cause serious disruption, and (b) farm state Democrats like Donnelly, Bennet, Warner Klobuchar, Heitkamp and of course Coons and Carper and others are under enormous pressure from conventional Ag interests to come up with some kind of acceptable solution that pre-empts Vermont's and other states' laws from taking effect and if Debbie withdraws from the compromise negotiations, she fears that other Dems who are less savvy about some of the issues here will end up negotiating a worse agreement than she would be able to get. Therefore, she has no choice but to keep pushing for something that is less damaging than Roberts but which will still fall short of a real path to mandatory labeling. Gary's Truth-o-meter note: the main reason these Democrat and Republican Senators are so eager to pre-empt Vermont is that they have been persuaded that the food industry cannot be subject to a "patchwork quilt" of 50 different state labeling laws. This is a scare tactic that has no basis in fact because the state labeling advocates have now ensured that every one of the states likely to pass labeling this year (MA, RI, NY and others) are using identical bills as VT's. So there is zero chance of a patchwork quilt but that of course does not stop the opposing lobbyists from repeating this ad nauseum.

* The reasons that Tom is so passionate about getting a compromise worked out is that he has become convinced that allowing VT's law to take effect must be avoided because the AG commodity community has spooked him that mandatory labeling will cause an avalanche of consumers seeking to find non-gmo alternatives and we will have resultant supply shortages and price inflation. He points to USDA reports that sugar cane supplies are not keeping up and calls this the tip of the iceberg. Gary's Truth-o-meter note: the main reason that sugar cane may not be keeping up with demand is because companies are moving away from high fructose corn syrup and this has nothing to do with GMO's. Moreover, actual experience in countries like Brazil is that labeling does not stimulate any sort of radical changes in consumer behavior, ie there will be no run to find non-gmo supplies and a comprehensive 5-year study of consumers released last year shows definitively that consumers do not see disclosures as warning symbols and labels will not change most consumers' behavior.

Conclusion: Unfortunately, I cannot persuade Tom on this point, despite the ample evidence to the contrary so there is no doubt that he will recommend that the President sign even a bad bill if it gets to his desk. And equally unfortunately, Debbie is caught between a rock and a hard place when it comes to saving the organic standards and also holding her caucus together, so I do understand why she needs to keep trying to lead the effort to find a compromise solution, even while she agrees that the passage of such a bill could unfortunately give Bernie a major PR, fundraising and political opportunity.

Proposed Solution: If I am right about all of this, then there are really only two ways for us to avoid delivering Bernie a giant opportunity to call for a national rally of 100,000 angry citizens in DC and dominate the media with this example of all that is wrong and impotent with the Obama/Clinton approach. And both solutions are needed. These are:

A) Immediately upon the introduction of the Roberts bill tomorrow night or sometime shortly after that, Hillary should pre-empt Bernie by coming out very strongly against the bill and in favor of mandatory GMO labeling because consumers, and particularly mothers absolutely have the right to know. I know this will pit her in opposition to Tom, but her failure to do this, or to allow Bernie to do it first, will only feed his narrative and demonstrate that she is a hostage to big food and chemical companies (Ask her yourself, but you will see that Debbie agrees with me on this), and

B) President Obama should break with his Ag Secretary and communicate asap to the Senate that he will veto any bill that does not contain a mandatory on-package labeling provision. This would have the effect of giving farm state Democrats the courage to not cave in to Roberts or the compromise and would also serve to prevent Bernie from claiming the high ground and trying to paint HRC into a corner.

Again, I am happy to talk in the am if you want. I urge you to take this very seriously because I am certain I am right about Bernie and his followers, and we simply must avoid handing him this plum.

John, the Roberts bill will be introduced on Monday night and it is now highly likely that a very bad "compromise" version will pass the senate this week and be approved by the House and on its way to the White House within a very short period. I can promise you that if President Obama signs this terrible legislation that blatantly validates Bernie's entire campaign message about Wall Street running our government, this will give Bernie a huge boost and 10,000 -20,000 outraged citizens (who WILL turn up because they will be so angry at the President for preemption vt) will be marching on the Mall with Bernie as their keynote speaker. In short, I feel certain that Obama (who famously promised on camera to implement mandatory GMO labeling) signing this bill will result in adding at least another month or more of money and attention to the Sanders campaign.

To avoid this, this bill can still be stopped if the WH and Clinton campaign come down now on the 12-14 farm state dems who Roberts will need to pass this compromise.

I am on a plane until 6:30 pm EST but can talk after that. I am also passing the same message to David Simas.

It will be terrible to hand Sanders this advantage at such a fragile time when we really need to save our $$$ for

We've outlined the story here: http://thinkprogress.org/politics/2016/03/10/3758686/trump-campaign-accuses-assaulted-reporter-of-lying/

Could be an opportunity for HRC to weigh in on Twitter, think it would go over well online. Could be a nice moment.

There was also a black man who as slugged by a Trump supporter last night that you probably heard about.

Subject: What Every 21st-Century American Should Know: A Democracy Project

DEMOCRACY
A JOURNAL OF IDEAS

Dear ,

Democracy is undertaking an exciting new project we need you to be a part of. Eric Liu, domestic policy adviser to Bill Clinton and Democracy editorial committee member, has written a reassessment of E.D. Hirsch Jr.'s book, Cultural Literacy, the 1987 tract that called for Americans to learn a shared cultural vocabulary.

Commentators viewed Hirsch as a conservative and his book as promoting a musty traditionalism, but Eric notes that not only was Hirsch a lifelong Democrat, he wanted to promote fluency with American history and culture as a means to reach progressive ends. Eric wants to revitalize this project, but with the recognition that we now live in a faster-moving, more fluid, and more multicultural America.

As a part of this effort, Democracy is calling on readers to submit the entries they'd add to a 21st-century list of cultural literacy. Read Eric's essay , then contribute the ten entries you'd like to see to a survey we've created. We'll be compiling the results and releasing them in the Fall Issue.

As always, thank you for reading!

Sincerely,

Michael Tomasky

Subject: [big campaign] Imus To Beck: Hannity And Limbaugh 'Hate You'

Awkward… and comes on the heels of Sen. Graham saying (of Beck) that "only in America can you make that much money crying," Limbaugh slamming Beck's 9/12 stunt as "cheap and disingenuous," fellow right-wing talk radio host Mark Levin calling Beck "pathetic," former Bush official and "Commentary" columnist Peter Wehner saying Beck is "harmful to the conservative movement," and David Frum slamming Beck for "mak[ing] a pleasant living for himself by reckless defamation" and calling Beck's rhetoric "beyond sloppy, beyond ignorant, proceeding straight toward the deceptive"…

Imus To Beck: Hannity And Limbaugh 'Hate You'

http://thinkprogress.org/2009/10/05/imus-beck/

This morning, Don Imus had his first show on the Fox Business Network, where he hosted Glenn Beck. At one point they joked about how their friendship might turn sour, with Beck commenting, "If I'm found dead in the streets, it's either Van Jones or Don Imus." Imus then asked Beck about his successes and highlighted some of the underlying tensions in the conservative movement:

> IMUS: So you're on the cover of Time magazine, your book's number one I've noticed this week.
> BECK: Yeah. It's gone well.
> IMUS: Sean Hannity, Rush, they both hate you.
> Beck: No. No, they don't.
> IMUS: They all hate you.
> BECK: No they don't, no they don't. Why must you stir up the hate?
> IMUS: You're telling me Rush is happy you're on the cover of Time?
> BECK: Yeah, I actually got a note from Rush.
> IMUS: What did Rush say?
> BECK: "I hate you." (LAUGHTER) No, you know what? Rush has been really very gracious. The whole time, he has. He really has.

Watch it:

While Imus was mostly joking, there have been disagreements on the right over how much prominence Beck should have. Last month, Limbaugh said that he found attempts to "rally people" — like Beck and his 9/12 Project do — "cheap and disingenuous ":

> "I don't rally people and haven't since the first year of my radio show," he wrote to POLITICO. "At that time, all local talk hosts were attempting to prove their worth by getting people to cut up gasoline credit cards, call Washington, etc. I thought it was cheap and disingenuous. The few times I did, early on, suggest people call Washington, the reaction to it from the media was that the response was not genuine (I shut down the House switchboard) because people only did what they did because 'Limbaugh told them to.'"

Beck's recent suggestion that "John McCain would have been worse for the country than Barack Obama" created a surge of anger to from conservatives, including Sen.Lindsey Graham (R-SC) and radio host Mark Levin. Former Bush administration officialsPeter Wehner and David Frum have also lamented the influence

Beck is having on the conservative movement.

The conservative movement may have to deal with a lot longer if some of his fans have their way. At a book signing in Worcester, MA this weekend, 500 people lined up in the rain to see the Fox News personality. When he arrived and greeted the crowd, one man yelled out, “Glenn Beck for president!”

Subject: Tar Sands Bike Pilgrimage Video & Concert This Friday!

Backbone Supporter

The Road to Athabasca is a group of storytellers, activists, and artists in Seattle, Washington that have committed to journey by bicycle to the tar sands in Alberta, Canada along the Trans Mountain pipeline this August 15-September 8 this year. Backbone Campaign is proud to be a partner in this exciting project.
Learn More About Our Pilgrimage !

Starting TODAY we have launched a Kickstarter that will help us go the distance, and make our journey that much more impactful. We invite you to share with your networks this collaborative art and cycling project.

We are biking this pilgrimage both as a personal, spiritual endeavor to understand ourselves within the reality of extreme energy extraction and as a strategic collective action to illuminate the tactics of the oil industry. To deepen the media impact of our journey, we are crafting a film with independent filmmaker Phil Walker, a lauded documentarian whose work has been featured on PBS, who is committed to traveling with us, documenting this journey, and crafting a film that will reach beyond into the larger public dialogue around oil dependency and renewable energy solutions.

Conservation + Bicycles + Art

"I believe in the power of storytelling to change the world. Our stories inform our values and our culture, which is currently corrupt. We need new, life-affirming, non-exploitative stories to be told so people can trust that there is happiness to be found in non-capitalistic, non-consumeristic ways of being.

- Heather Elder, Artist and Cyclist

Through this ride, we are challenging ourselves and our communities to tell the story of what we are capable of, to grapple with our own power and agency and subvert the oil industry's narrative that we are dependent on dirty energy and have no other alternative.

Thank you for joining us on this journey to bring the tar sands home.

Weekly Transition Memo for Senator Obama

From: Transition Advisory Board and Staff
Date: September 12, 2008

I. Vice President-Elect Team

We have now constituted a new working group to help with the VP's transition. That group will be headed by two long-time Biden associates, Mark Gitenstein and Ted Kaufman. Mark and Ted have reached out to the agency review team to ensure that people in the Biden circle are included in that process, in particular in the areas of national security and justice. In addition, Mark and Ted will be talking to the national security policy group.

II. Working Groups

All six of the major policy teams (national security, health care, education, energy, economy, and immigration) are on track to produce draft policy papers by the end of September that will be reviewed by the transition board. Within each of these broader areas, subgroups are being set up to address specific issues. For instance, the national security group (headed by Susan Rice, Jim Steinberg, and Sarah Sewall) has established subgroups such as: Afghanistan/Pakistan; Iran; Middle East peace process and the Gulf; intelligence/counter-terrorism/homeland security; and national security law.

We have four full-time research assistants who are cataloguing the campaign policy promises in about 50 major areas. We also have a very large team of outside lawyers and consultants that is assisting the agency review team in researching specific federal agencies (e.g., budgets, personnel, rulemaking).

The first family transition group set up a meeting in Chicago this week for Michelle and Ann Stock, the social secretary during the Clinton Administration.

III. Executive Orders

The policy groups and agency review teams are analyzing executive orders and possible administrative action that can be taken quickly in their areas after Inauguration Day. We also will be convening a team of lawyers headed by Todd Stern to take a broader look at how to organize this process on a government-wide basis.

IV. Pre-Clearance of Nominees and Transition Staff

We are in the process of getting FBI security clearances for transition staff, particularly in the area of national security, so we can hit the ground running on November 5.

We also have met with the Office of Government Ethics about confidentially assisting potential nominees with completing their financial disclosure reports. As you probably know, completing these forms properly can be a painstaking process, particularly for wealthy individuals who may be required divest certain holdings before entering government service.

IV. Operations

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We are mocking up a website that would go live on November 5. The idea is to carry over many of the same technological advances from the campaign to the transition in an effort to maximize public participation in the transition. The website also would allow the submission of resumes.

Behind the website is a personnel database that would process the resumes and allow us to search for candidates to fill positions. The White House has determined that the current personnel database is inadequate to meet its needs and has agreed to put a new system in place for the new Administration. This week, we met with the White House and the McCain campaign, and we believe we are close to an agreement of what system to use.

In the area of facilities, we are currently looking at two transition spaces: a Washington, D.C. headquarters where most of the staff will be located; and a Chicago office where you could hold meetings with potential nominees. Our assumption is that most nomination announcements would be done in Chicago, in which case we will need to plan for a location to hold press conferences. The tentative Chicago space is the federal building where your Senate office is located.

V. Miscellaneous

We have made the decision not to disclose the existence of our 501(c)(4) and the names of our donors until we are asked by the press. This may happen in short order, however, since Time magazine has reported that William Timmons is assisting the McCain campaign with its transition. Timmons worked in the Nixon and Ford Administrations and assisted Reagan and George W. Bush with their transitions. He is also a prominent D.C. lobbyist and has registered to lobby on behalf of the American Petroleum Institute, the American Medical Association, Chrysler, Freddie Mac, Visa USA, and Anheuser-Busch. At the end of the Time story, there is a mention that John Podesta is assisting your transition efforts.

All, I wanted to give everyone a heads up that tomorrow at the Clinton Foundation's CGI-U in Miami, HRC and Chelsea will have a public discussion about their No Ceilings work on behalf of women and girls. There's a script that will serve mostly as a guide, but they're going to try to make it a free-flowing conversation. I'm attaching the talking points here.

I'm sorry not to have shared this sooner. HRC wasn't sure she was going to participate and there was a lot of back and forth at the Foundation about the format, so it really only came together today. If you have any concerns, please let me know.

Also, as you may recall, they will do a similar discussion with Melinda Gates on Monday in New York and then HRC will give a 15-minute speech at the UN on Tuesday. I'll send a draft of those remarks around over the weekend so everyone can take a look.

Please don't hesitate to share any thoughts or feedback.

Thanks
Dan

Subject: Beyond Earth Day

John --

Earth Day is when we take a moment to appreciate the wonder that is our home.

In Los Angeles, we are privileged with an abundance of natural beauty, from the Pacific Ocean to our mountains.

But we cannot to take this place for granted.

One of my greatest pleasures is seeing the excitement of my young daughter as she encounters the natural world. I hope she always has that opportunity, but that depends on whether we act today.

Join me and Friends of the L.A. River for a cleanup this weekend so we can help restore the waterway that gave birth to our city.

The Friends of the L.A. River has organized a series of cleanups over the next few days and weeks. So if you can't make it this weekend, try to make it for a later date.

Click here for details on each of the river cleanups.

Happy Earth Day!

My thoughts
I think that if Mary Pat can start scheduling days for him she can make use of Rob's time- I do think her targets would be different from what he is laying out here.

#4 will also take some negotiation skills- while I do believe this process could be very helpful and mentioned that when we talked- Mary Pat is concerned about him making this planning sessions too labor intensive and taking her away from her primary responsibilities.

Unless we can get a harder commitment from him on travel and fundraising the $8,000 does not seem as useful an investment unless he is really committed to the fundraising meeting portion

Let me know if you have any strong reactions to this
I will have some further conversations with Rob and Mary Pat and see if we can reach some consensus.

Subject: My thoughts

John and Amy:

Having spoken to you both today, here are my thoughts about how I can best assist FFA:

(1) I will commit approximately 30% of my time to FFA through 2008 (approx. 1-2 days per week)

(2) I will solicit, primarily prospects capable of high 6 and 7 figure contributions who are not DA Partners (although I believe that I can and will be willing to help with some); and prefer to concentrate my solicitations as much as possible east of the Mississippi

(3) Since I am travelling about 6 or 7 days per month for DA and Committee On States, some of my solicitations can be built around that travel. In addition, I am willing to add a couple of travel days per month for FFA.

(4) Amy and I are in agreement that quality management of the fundraising program requires a reguarly scheduled (bi-weekly) meeting, chaired by Amy, to reveiw status of every aspect of the program. A set of agreed upon metrics will form the basis of this review. These fundraising oversight meetings will include Amy, myself, the prime consultants, and perhaps one or two others that Amy chooses. Without this intensity of oversight, we will not maintain the tight controls necessary to continuously review progress, estimate our cash flow, reach beyond our known donor universe to other prosepcts, and generally assess fundraising performance. My task will be to work with the consultants to assure that they are ready for these meetings and then to participate in them.

(5) I will be paid $8K per month for this work.

John, there is the Logan Act, Marshall

The Logan Act (1 Stat. 613 , 18 U.S.C. § 953 , enacted January 30, 1799 (1799-01-30)) is a United States federal law that forbids unauthorized citizens from negotiating with foreign governments. It was intended to prohibit unauthorized United States citizens from interfering in relations between the United States and foreign governments.[2] The Act was passed following George Logan 's unauthorized negotiations with France in 1798, and was signed into law by President John Adams on January 30, 1799. The Act was last amended in 1994, and violation of the Logan Act is a felony.

Hi, John. Long time... Hope you and your family are doing well. Have a favor to ask- one of my clients, the National Association of Charter School Authorizers (NACSA)- a non-profit, non-partisan, Chicago-based, K- 12 education trade association which approves new charter schools, renews the successful ones and closes the failed ones- wants to sit down in September with a senior campaign policy staffer who handles ED issues. Greg Richmond, the CEO of NACSA, worked for Arne Duncan when Duncan ran the Chicago public schools.

Greg and his Director of Federal and State Affairs, Amanda Fenton, would go to Brooklyn to talk with the staffer about NACSA, it's mission and what it has to offer the campaign as a resource. Can you direct me to the right person?

Many thanks, John.

Best, DAN

Subject:	"Don't Ask, Don't Tell" Victory

Dear John,

I've got some wonderful news! The Senate has just voted to repeal "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

Finally, we have overturned the ban on openly gay men and women serving in our military. Not only does DADT prevent our brave LGBT servicemen and women from serving their country freely and truthfully, but it poses a threat to the readiness of our armed forces and stands in direct opposition to the equality and fairness that America stands for.

It's been a long, hard road, and I couldn't have done it without your support. Yes, I've always known that the American people are overwhelmingly in favor of repeal. But you've given me what no poll ever could - the inspiration and encouragement to keep pressing on.

What a great feeling it is to know that you've accomplished a goal that will literally change the lives of thousands of people. But we're not done yet.

The Senate still has some very important business to finish before we adjourn for the year. Next week, I'm aiming for a Christmas miracle to pass the James Zadroga 9/11 Health & Compensation Act so we can finally fulfill the moral obligation we have to our 9/11 heroes and provide them with the health care they need.

Whether I'm fighting for gay and lesbian servicemembers or for our 9/11 heroes, I can't tell you how much it means to have you by my side.

As we approach the final days of this Congress, I'll be in touch to update you on our ongoing progress.

All the best,
Kirsten

Subject:	Throw Big Oil off the fiscal cliff

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Tell your members of Congress to throw Big Oil off the fiscal cliff and protect investments in conservation, clean energy, and public health!

John,

We've got an idea for Congress: How about instead of cutting investments that support our families, protect our health, and preserve our environment, we finally get rid of those handouts that give oil companies billions of our taxpayer dollars every year to keep polluting our air and waterways?

It seems like the most obvious plan, but right now Big Oil's congressional allies are pushing hard to do just the opposite as Congress looks for a way to deal with the so-called "fiscal cliff." Big Oil's allies in Congress want to protect special tax breaks for dirty energy companies while cutting investments in conservation, clean energy, and public health. That makes no sense. But unless Congress hears from us now, they might just have their way.

Email your members of Congress today: Tell them to throw Big Oil off the fiscal cliff, not the environmental programs that we all depend on!

Tell your members of Congress to end Big Oil handouts, not environmental protections!

Big Oil has already recorded over $90 billion in profits so far in 2012. Yet the oil industry continues to receive $4 billion in taxpayer subsidies every year. It is unacceptable that Big Oil's congressional cronies would have us fork over our tax dollars to these corporate polluters, while being forced to cut programs that protect our health and our environment. But even though environmental programs only make up 1.25% of the national budget, some members of Congress think we can somehow balance the budget by further decimating these critical programs. They would:

– Eliminate tax credits that have helped the wind industry grow,
– Starve our National Parks of funding,
– Cut programs for clean energy research and innovation,
– Undermine efforts to clean up contaminated waterways, and – End programs that support more than 130 National Wildlife Refuges.

We can't afford to lose these programs that keep our water clean, protect the places and wildlife we love, and build the infrastructure we need to curb global warming. So we need to make sure that Congress hears loud and clear that their constituents will not allow our health and our future to be traded away — especially not while they keep doling out billions to dirty energy companies.

Send a message to your members of Congress right now urging them to put an end to Big Oil handouts, not our environmental protection programs.

If we ended the handouts that we currently give to oil and gas companies, it would save more than $40 billion over the next 10 years. Given the furor over cutting wasteful spending, this should be a no-brainer. But Congress won't do it without hearing from you today.

So we hope you'll join us in asking your member of Congress to stop subsidizing an industry that harms our health , and invest instead in clean energy jobs that will that strengthen our environment, our economy, and our energy independence.

Thanks,

Gene

Subject: Drugs and Terror Monster Conjugated Aggravation in the Middle East

SALVATION OF MANKIND BY NARCOTIC VEGETATION ERADICATION FROM THE AIR BY UNMANNED AIRCRAFT VEHICLES

Mr. President,

Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles

Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows: 2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation causing its Desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:

1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health
19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV
Aloft in order to achieve Narcotic Vegetation Desertification with achievement for Posterity
20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!
21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up
Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!
22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 7000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!
23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.
24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able Indicating Monumental achievements. He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence
25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming
Strike on Terror Organizations by UAV Utilization might have been an Unprecedented Achievement of Entire Mankind and President Obama personally.
26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite
My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!
27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.
28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

Be successful

Gideon Rodeh

There is no justification losing an Election Campaign Ignominiously instead of emerging Victorious honorably! The Democrats should have mobilized the entire US Media attacking the Republican for an Exploitation of US Contingency to vote against their own Interests in favor of big Oil Corporations! Such incessant Transmissions would have been a very efficacious Deterrence for most Democratic families to abstain from voting against their own Interests!

Be successful

Subject:	G'town Law, MIT Offer Joint Privacy Practicum Course

During the spring 2015 semester, Georgetown University Law Center and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will offer a practicum course that pairs Georgetown Law students and MIT students to study the legal and technical aspects of current privacy problems, and then apply that expertise to drafting model state privacy legislation.

“There are too few lawyers who are comfortable working with technologists, and vice versa. We hope that this one-of-a-kind course will bridge that gap, training a new generation of attorneys and engineers to approach privacy problems from a multi-disciplinary perspective,” said Georgetown Law Dean William M. Treanor. “We are pleased to partner with MIT on this exciting opportunity for our students.”

Subject:	Next step for HRC

Great meeting today and congrats to Teddy, Jim, Mandy on a great shoot.
Just talked to the boss and she said she DID want a few sharp issue nuggets she could use in Iowa. She had a follow up convo w Deblasio and agreed some overall issues would be good but acknowledged she doesn't need complicated details--basically what we discussed w her today. Just wants to show she's passionate and clued into progressive issues.
She asked if we want to add content to the video and I said I didn't think we need that but she should certainly have a few items to bring up in Iowa to voters and perhaps as a pivot to reporters. I also said we planned to do a wrap up digital video and perhaps we could make some news on a particular issue there.
Can we get a draft around that we can send tomorrow am? Jen/Kristina can you take lead on getting together? I said I'd follow up in the AM. Mandy mentioned putting something like this together I think.
She and I discussed the following two:
--banning corporate money in politics (she got super passionate about this one--"corporations aren't people and they don't get the rights of a human being")
--ending the carried interest loophole
Maybe add college affordability and prescriptions?

As some of you know, we've never formally filed papers for our 501(c)(4). For a variety of reasons, we think it makes sense to finally do that after Election Day. We'll also rename it the "Obama-Biden Transition Project". John has suggested that the five people listed on the incorporation papers will be the five of you. There's nothing you need to do, but the press will obviously get a copy of the legal papers. I just wanted to give you a heads-up in case you have any concerns. (And if it makes any difference, we're getting directors and officers liability insurance for the transition.)

John --

Today, the thoughts and prayers of all Americans are with those in the path of Hurricane Gustav -- and many of you are asking what you can do to help.

We do not yet know what the impact of Hurricane Gustav will be, and we hope with all our hearts that the damage will not be as great as it was three years ago.

But we know there will be damage, and there is something you can do right now.

Your financial support will strengthen organizations like the American Red Cross that are evacuating Gulf Coast residents and planning to help communities get back on their feet.

Make a donation to support the American Red Cross today.

At times like this, it is our compassion and resilience that define who we are as a nation.

Please give whatever you can afford, even $10, to make sure the American Red Cross has the resources to help those in the path of this storm:

Thank you for your generosity, and I hope you will join Michelle and me in praying for the safety of those in the path of the storm and the first responders who are doing all they can to ensure the safety of their communities.

--Chris Matthews discusses NY Times article this weekend which looks at Republican attack machine against HRC. Says NYT reports looked at focus groups set up by Karl Rove Super PAC Crossroads which gathered about 50 voters representing groups that it believes can be persuaded to vote against HRC. The group was made up of an all-white group of young men, low income adults, married mothers, and politically moderate women. Shows as attacking HRC as untrustworthy, secretive, scandal-ridden, as well as rich and out of touch. Perry Bacon joins the show and says the GOP is trying to capitalize on polls which show that people already question HRC's honesty and trustworthiness so that Jeb or Marco can stay more positive. Matthews says the GOP just likes to bash HRC. Michelle Bernard says that's not smart and she questions what we see coming out of these focus groups. Says HRC has made some foolhardy statements such as, we were dead broke coming out of the White House, but HRC is not a Mitt Romney in pantsuit – she has always been a champion for women, children, and the underclass. Voters will look at it through the lens of, whose policies will be better for me. Says that everything else won't hurt HRC too much. Bernard says HRC has said she will do something with the tax code to incentivize profit sharing – that is something that people will legitimately attack her on. Bacon says the email issue itself is not going to win the Republicans the election, polls show that issue is not very strong. Says Republicans need to peel some voters away from Obama who currently has very high approval. Bacon says that one way they can do this is by attacking her personality since most people don't vote strictly on policy. Thinks this is a smart angle for the Republicans to test. Matthews says in 2008 when HRC became very emotional, she came across better when she was on the defensive. Bernard says it's a big risk for the Republicans to take because people will constantly be targeting women, especially women of color who traditionally vote democrat who are going to like that HRC has broken through the glass ceiling. --Lou Dobbs comments on HRC economic agenda. Says she called for higher taxes and more regulation of Wall Street and lashed out at Republicans. --Commentary on HRC economic address. Says HRC promoted growth through higher taxes and profit sharing as well as advocating higher wages. Shows clip of HRC saying that wages need to rise to keep up with checks. Jonathan Hoenig joins the show and criticizes HRC for talking about fairness, saying she talked about fair market rather than free market and says that her version of that is the government having a hand in everything. Calls it "full economic dictatorship." Says it's worse than Obama. Says Obama's efforts have made the rich richer and the middle class even further down the line. Hoenig claims that the country is primed for HRC's policies and we are in trouble because her speech reflected the economic views of many Americans right now. Kennedy says that places like Venezuela show why HRC's plan doesn't work. Hoenig says HRC will decide how the economy is going to run and who is going to get helped and who will get hurt. --Review of HRC's economic speech and speech at La Raza. Says she targeted Scott Walker and pledged to stand behind corporate profit sharing. Shows clip of HRC saying she believes in and will fight for profit sharing. Says HRC slammed republicans during her La Raza speech for not speaking out against Donald Trump sooner. Mark Preston joins the show and says HRC is moving to the left and some think she has been pushed that way by Bernie Sanders. Host says HRC talked about imposing more regulations on financial institutions and host wonders how this will be possible since financial institutions are so strong and HRC is seen as a friend of Wall Street. Preston says HRC has done very well with people on Wall Street. Preston says it doesn't matter all that much because the executive branch still have to work with Congress. --Lawrence O'Donnell jokes that Scott Walker was welcomed to the campaign today by HRC. Shows clip of HRC saying that Republican governors like Walker have been stomping on workers' rights. --Shows clip of Gene Sperling saying the worst thing is when a president lobs in too many policies at once and no one can understand them. Lawrence O'Donnell says this is the justification for very few specifics in HRC's economic speech. Quotes what he says are all specific policy proposals in the entire speech including closing loopholes that reward companies for sending jobs and profits overseas, funding scientific and medical research that spawns innovative companies and create entire new industries, closing carried interest loophole that lets wealthy financiers pay an artificially low rate, providing universal pre-k, going beyond Dodd-Frank to simplify financial institutions and make them less risky. O'Donnell says the rest of the speech was made up of attacks on Republicans and boiler-plate speechmaking that could be put into any speech by any politician. Shows clip of HRC saying we must raise incomes for hardworking Americans so they can have a middle class life and that will be her mission. Shows clip of HRC commenting on Jeb Bush saying American workers need to work longer hours. O'Donnell says Bernie Sanders talks much more specifically. E.J. Dionne joins the show and says HRC is thinking of a general and Bernie is focused on the primary. Dionne defends HRC saying she talked about specifics like profit sharing and overtime and family leave. Says what HRC was doing was saying that the Republicans want to make it about growth and she's for that too, but she is for more fair, sustainable growth. Says she is challenging them on the issue of stagnating wages. She wants it to be a bidding war for the votes of working class and middle class voters. So many of the issues she's had have been about issues. Seems to be taking a leaf out of WJC's book and giving a whole bunch of policy speeches and banking on the fact that voters care more about their wallets than any other issues. O'Donnell says she went on for 45 minutes and most of it was a drone and Bernie is more engaging. Charlie Cook says no normal person is watching a 45 minute speech by any politician. Cook says there's nothing a campaign strategist likes more than their opponent being very specific because it allows for attacks. Says income inequality is not a dangerous place to go and it goes beyond the Democratic base. Stuart Stevens says HRC seems to be the most joyless candidate to run for president ever. Says it's like someone made her go say these things and Jeb seems to be having the time of his life compared to HRC. O'Donnell says it's the tension of being the frontrunner because there's so much pressure to be cautious. Stevens says since January HRC has done nothing but lose votes. Says when Howard Dean was the front runner he seemed to be having the time of his life, says Bernie seems to be having a lot more fun. Dionne says HRC is being very careful, maybe more careful than she should be. Thinks she is too cautious with the press but she is a policy wonk and she's banking on the voters wanting that. Dan, I think the LGBT stuff is lovely. I like ending on Larry and Dillard -- though the summary of her dad's prejudices was a bit of a shock.

Joel, "the future business" or "solutions business" is a favorite Roy Spence construction.

On the politics transition, I think it's helpful after the more poetic opening to have some way to get to the red meat.

My concern is that the leadership critique is that it's the wrong attack point. The problem with these guys who attacked the SCOTUS decision is not that they failed to show leadership, it's that they are mired in the past. I don't care how old they are, they cannot build America's future, if they still want to build an America that punishes people for who they love.

Again, we should be reinforcing tomorrow/yesterday and future/past in all our critiques.

Thanks Joel. Curious what others think about the politics line. Could easily cut. But I included it because I felt she needed a little inoculation/ explanation for why we're shifting from a pretty high-minded discussion to some hard-hitting contrast.
"Future business" is a Bill Clinton thing, but that too we could easily lose.

Team, I've re-written this speech in light of today's Supreme Court ruling. Have tried to capture some of the feel of this day, with celebration in the morning and grief in the afternoon, and what it all means for the work we have to do in this country (and what's so wrong with the Republicans). See what you think.

The measure of our success should be be how many families can get ahead and stay ahead, not how much CEOs are paid. The measure of our success should be how much wages are rising for workers who companies succeed, not how much bigger the bonuses get for those at the top.

Everything that can be done is being done and done very well.

I think the tide is back in our direction. Remember, the three rules for Iowa: Rule Number one is organize. Rule 2, organize. Rule 3, get hot at the end. John, as Ted Cruz is finding out, the end isn't three weeks out or even two weeks out. It is the last five days.

It could be that Iowa Ds are just too liberal, but I like our position.

I mentioned this to John some time back, but think it's a bit more current now.

It is most likely that this decision has already been made by the Court, but on the off chance that history is repeating itself, then it's possible they are still deciding (last time, seems like Roberts went from striking the mandate to supporting it in the weeks before). As Jennifer will remember, it was pretty critical that the President threw the gauntlet down last time on the Court, warning them in the first case that it would politicize the role of the Court for them to rule against the ACA. As a close reader of the case, I honestly believe that was vital to scaring Roberts off.

In this case, I'm not arguing that Hillary spend a lot of time attacking the Court. I do think it would be very helpful to all of our interest in a decision affirming the law, for Roberts and perhaps Kennedy to see negative political consequences to ruling against the government.
Therefore, I think it would be helpful to have a story of how progressives and Hillary would make the Supreme Court an election issue (which would be a ready argument for liberals) if the Court rules against the government. It's not that you wish that happens. But that would be the necessary consequence of a negative decision...the Court itself would become a hugely important political issue.

At CAP Action, we can get that story started. But kinda rests on you guys to make it stick.

What do you think? If you want to proceed, we should move soon.

Let me know thoughts. And I'm happy to discuss.

Ending America's energy deficit
By: Roberta Combs and Larry Schweiger
April 28, 2010 05:10 AM EDT

America works best when Americans work together.

We have been encouraged in recent months by the bipartisan efforts in the Senate to break through the energy gridlock.

Now, though political divides threaten to stall progress, Congress must not turn aside from the continuing crisis.

America's energy policy is in a rut — and getting deeper by the day. Every 24 hours, we spend $1 billion dollars on imported oil — largely to nations that don't like us and put our sons and daughters in harm's way.

Our oil dependency is a gaping hole in America's wallet that drains our economy and leaves families victim to volatile gas prices. It puts our country's national security at risk, sends jobs overseas and pollutes the environment.

How have we been paying for America's energy deficit? By borrowing money hand-over-fist from China, which holds nearly a trillion dollars in U.S. Treasury securities.

Borrowing from China to pay for oil from the Middle East and Venezuela isn't an energy strategy: It's a recipe for economic ruin.

America's energy deficit may grow beyond oil, for China is racing ahead to develop energy alternatives. Four years ago, China owned 3 percent of the global solar-panel market. Today, it controls almost half.

No nation in the world can out-compete America's innovation and our workers — once we determine to lead.

As leaders of national organizations — and grandparents — we believe America must look to the future to shape our energy priorities.

Imagine what we could do if we kept even half the money we pay for oil and instead invested it in energy technologies here in America.

Millions of new jobs would be created. America would lead the clean energy revolution instead of standing on the sidelines.

Congress must act. This is why we supported Sens. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), John Kerry (D-Mass.) and Joe Lieberman (I-Conn.) and their three essential goals.

First, let's slash our dependency on imported oil and pursue advanced technologies like next-generation biofuels, improve the fuel economy of cars and trucks and build a truck fleet powered by natural gas.

Second, let's create jobs in new energy industries -- manufacturing, delivering and installing alternative energy technologies.

Despite mixed signals from Washington, clean energy is one of the few bright spots in the sagging U.S.

With a strong push from Congress, U.S. businesses and entrepreneurs will bring the power of America's free market to bear on solving our energy crisis, while ensuring our future prosperity.

Third, we must reduce pollution from smokestacks and tailpipes. Concerns for the environment are not Republican or Democrat, conservative or liberal. Protecting the air our kids breathe and the water they drink is a family value. We must continue to conserve America's natural outdoor bounty as generations have done before us.

An energy policy that provides incentives for clean energy alternatives and requires corporations to do their part to reduce pollution can boost our economy, while fulfilling our moral obligation as environmental stewards.

Some may consider ours an unusual partnership. But our two organizations share a common interest in building support for a bipartisan energy plan.

Whether our members approach this as people of faith, as hunters and anglers, as parents or grandparents or as young Americans looking to the future, they understand that the United States cannot afford to remain stuck in the energy rut we are in now.

Divided, our energy policy will continue to serve those who profit from our oil dependency. Together, we can chart a new path on energy – that delivers greater security, more jobs and less pollution.

We should do nothing less for our grandchildren.

Kerry in Ramallah: US Committed to Palestinian Statehood

US Secretary of State Kerry expressed sympathy for the Palestinians' "very dire" situation, but also spoke of his concern "about the violence," while stressing the ongoing US commitment to a Palestinian state. "I am here at the request of President Obama to see what we can do to try to help contribute to calm and to restore people's confidence in the ability of a two-state solution to still be viable, to be achieved at some point…We are committed to that two states with two peoples living side by side…The United States will continue to work as hard as possible to achieve that end."

Report: Israel Weighs Transfer of 10k Dunams to PA

The Civil Administration, which acts as the IDF's liaison to the Palestinian population in the West Bank, is considering the possibility of transferring some 10,000 dunams (about 3.8 square miles) of land currently under Israeli control to the Palestinian Authority. The move, if implemented, would be carried out as a goodwill gesture to the Palestinians in exchange for efforts on the Authority's part to help quell a surge in Palestinian terror attacks over the past two months.

Israel Strikes Hezbollah Positions in Syria, Killing 13

Unconfirmed Syrian media reports said Tuesday that Israel carried out some four airstrikes on Syrian regime and Hezbollah positions in the area of Syria's Qalamoun mountains on Monday night. A report by Al-Souria Net, a pro-opposition outlet, said eight Hezbollah fighters and five Syrian soldiers were killed in the raids, which hit the border region between Lebanon and Syria. "After several hours of reconnaissance flights above the area, Israeli planes suddenly launched two raids on a joint Assad forces and Hezbollah position…This was immediately followed by a third raid. The Israeli planes resumed their attack with a fourth air raid after several minutes, targeting a Hezbollah position in western Qalamoun." The report said "dozens" were injured in the airstrikes, four of them critically.

Israel, Egypt Oppose Reduction in Sinai Peacekeeping Force

The US-led peacekeeper force in the insurgency-wracked Sinai will remain unchanged after Egypt and Israel rebuffed proposals to trim it by about a fifth, an Egyptian official said on Tuesday. Installed to monitor the demilitarization of the Sinai under the 1979 Egyptian-Israeli peace accord, the Multinational Force and Observers (MFO) and some of its 12 contributor countries have been considering changes to its deployment and mandate. They worry about the safety of the almost 1,900 peacekeepers after six were wounded in September by a roadside bomb.

After Deadly Attacks Gush Etzion Taking Zero Risks on Security

Gush Etzion has been hit by some of the deadliest attacks during the last two months of daily stabbings, car-rammings and shootings by Palestinian terrorists. Most recently, 21-year-old Hadar Buchris of Tzfat was stabbed to death in a brutal attack. In response, Gush Etzion's Regional Council is stepping up their efforts to restore calm and a sense of security the area. "We are installing security cameras in all of the kindergartens in the region. We are looking after the security of the youth groups during their weekly activities, and we are organizing increased security for a fair on Friday in which local residents will be able to come out and shop with a sense of safety and calm. All of this is in an effort to restore a sense of calm to the residents who live in the area."

Israel to Displace Thousands of Bedouins

An Israeli plan to build several new Jewish-only communities in the Negev region of the country's south will displace thousands of citizens of Israel from two Bedouin villages. Approved by the Israeli government on Sunday, the plan allows for the construction of five new Jewish planned communities, two of which will be on top of a pair of Bedouin villages. Bir Hadaj village is home to at least 6,000 people, while an estimated 1,500 live in Katama village, which is classified by the government as an "unrecognized" village.

Israeli Intelligence Helped Thwart Terror Attack in Germany

Israel reportedly helped thwart devastating terror attacks in Paris , according to a story published in German magazine Stern. Stern cites German government sources that said Israel provided crucial intelligence about an imminent terror attack targeting the friendly match between Germany and Holland's soccer teams. This led to the cancelation of the game and the evacuation of the stadium, only 90 minutes before the game was to start. According to Stern magazine, Israeli intelligence passed information to German authorities about a planned terror bombing at the stadium in Hanover as early as Monday. The next day, November 17, more concrete information, including specific details of the planned attack, was gathered from the same source, indicating on an immediate threat.

Time to Talk to the Palestinians

Continuing to hold onto the West Bank while doing zero to settle the conflict will keep costing Israeli lives.

By Avi Issacharoff

The series of attacks over the past two days in which two Israelis were killed demonstrates what Israel evidently refuses to acknowledge: we are in the midst of a third Intifada with no end in sight. This is an uprising minus the masses and without a guiding hand, but with quite a few not-so-lone terrorists and endless motivation on the part of young Palestinian men and women to go out and kill and, if necessary, be killed.

The attackers come from all ranks of the Palestinian population, from towns and villages, refugee camps and affluent neighborhoods, and they range in age from 11 to 73. And worst of all, it seems nothing can stop the trend. The status quo is the big winner at this stage. And it's not the status quo that we all miss from three months ago, that of "relative calm." We're in a new reality in which every day brings more attacks, more wounded and more killed.

By my calculation, no change can be expected in the current situation for another year and a half. The American government, whose representative, Secretary of State John Kerry, arrives in the region today, has no plans to renew negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. So until the US elections a year from now, no policy change can be expected. It will then take another two months for the new president to take office, and then another few months to hash out a new Middle East policy, at the end of which there may or may not be a change in the political sphere.

For their part, the Palestinian Authority appears to have switched to silent mode, avoiding blatant incitement and refraining from making public pronouncements. They're basically missing in action. Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas and his people appear to be in no hurry to get anywhere in particular, and are perfectly content to watch Israel bleed as long as no one can blame them for it. As for the Israeli government, it's sticking to the line that there's nothing to be done and nobody to negotiate with and now's not the time for talks or making gestures to the Palestinian Authority because that would amount to rewarding terror.

The absurdity is that when things were relatively calm, those same politicians opposed initiatives, negotiations, gestures etc., because, they said, the conflict can't be resolved, only managed, and the status quo is not bad for Israel. The security establishment's repeated warnings that without negotiations or significant gestures there would be an escalation fell on deaf ears. For these politicians, the calm was the be all and end all. Then the violence flared up. At which point, those who argued against making gestures or negotiations took every opportunity to say we told you so.

No, they did not tell us so. We in the media and those in defense told them this would happen and that they needed to act, and they opted to ignore us in order to preserve the sanctity of Greater Israel. Perhaps they were right. Maybe peace negotiations and even territorial concession would lead to catastrophe. As things stand, it looks like we'll never know. What we do know is that if you want to just "manage the conflict," there will be a bloody price to pay, and it's time to make that clear to the largely right-wing Israeli public: the "managing the conflict" bubble has burst in our faces and the price is getting higher and higher with each passing day. You wanted to keep controlling the territories? You wanted to continue the occupation? That's the price.

Meanwhile, Israeli ministers look like deer in the headlights just before the vehicle hits. They are helpless, with no hope or solutions and, above all, frozen in place. When decision-makers of Naftali Bennett's ilk are asked about it, they answer along the lines of "this government is doing more than past governments." They're referring to punitive house demolitions, security re-enforcements, military operations. They may be right. There's just one little problem with that argument: Under previous governments such measures weren't necessary because there were far fewer attacks. And even with the house demolitions and sending more troops to the Gush Etzion junction, new places will always pop up where there will be three or thirty soldiers and some young Palestinian stupid enough to try to attack.

So what's the solution? Ultimately, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu may have no choice but to resort to the doomsday option: Actually talking with the Palestinian Authority to negotiate peace. No other solution is likely to bring quiet. And even that one may no longer work.

The Unwinnable War: Can We Demand that the IDF Win?

By Eitan Haber

Israeli leaders, in every period and in every government, are very fond of using big words: We will eradicate, liquidate, win and so on and so forth. But outside the public podium, in the Prime Minister's Bureau in Jerusalem or in the Defense Ministry in Tel Aviv, sitting in front of the chief of staff, the GSS director or his representative and relevant IDF generals, they wring their hands, raise their voice at the participants of the nighttime discussions and ask: Well, what shall we do now?

Attentive listeners will notice the confusion in the voices and in the question of the leaders. Careful observers will notice almost immediately the anger in their faces. The security forces, meaning the IDF and the GSS, are unable to "deliver the goods." In other words, the political echelon is usually angry at the security forces for being unable to suppress the Palestinian terror attacks and to bring calm to the land. Afterwards, at the end of the long meeting, in conversations held in the corridor, the security officials will speak their opinion of the political echelon. The political officials, for their part, will also have a great deal to say about the army and the security services.

People say: The great IDF—which reached Entebbe and blew up (according to foreign reports) the reactors in Iraq and Syria, which swiftly defeated the Egyptians, the Syrians and the Jordanians in the Six-Day War, planted a flag on the banks of the Suez Canal, took over the entire West Bank, took over with gritted teeth the Syrian Golan Heights in 1967 and fended off the Syrians from the Golan in the Yom Kippur War of 1973, and also wiped out the achievements of the Egyptian army at the time—is unable to stand against a few dozen teenagers with knives and screwdrivers?

The answer is: no, the warlike speeches, inflammatory rhetoric and the "eradicate" and "liquidate" talk notwithstanding. Terrorism of this kind cannot be defeated, among other things because it exploits, as in the Yom Kippur War, the loopholes that the IDF unwillingly leaves behind. The Palestinians learn and try not to repeat their mistakes. In the case before us, they make extensive use of children and of very primitive weapons, and encourage a kind of popular uprising. How can an army, no matter how large and strong, prevent a 13 year-old from stabbing an innocent civilian on the street?

The IDF has Iron Dome batteries, which cost the taxpayer hundreds of millions, laser cannons, state-of-the-art radar screens, advanced cyber-warfare capabilities—and what more can we ask for? What do the Palestinians have? Knives, primitive guns, rockets and missiles that cost almost nothing, just a few hundred dollars. We, thank God, have missiles that cost millions of dollars.

So why is it that missiles that cost us hundreds of thousands of dollars each cannot defeat the primitive missiles that cost just a few hundred dollars, despite the fact that they are much "smarter"?

How is it that tens of thousands of people closet themselves at home in fear because of kitchen knives? Why is it that every person with an Arab accent is classified here as a suspected terrorist? The answer, as of now, is that the Palestinian despair has recently met the Israeli despair. The knife cannot win, but it keeps the Palestinian problem in the picture, and causes the world to believe that it is the source of all its troubles. This is enough for the Palestinians.

The Palestinians feel that they have nothing to lose, and go out with knives to instill fear and terror in us. We are alarmed, and show our alarm. The Palestinians are encouraged and believe that they will win. They still don't know that the two sides will have no choice but to find a path to a diplomatic solution. It's very simple: Unlike them, we Israelis have nowhere to go.

We are all focused on getting diversity and we have to get there. But we also have a lot of big jobs to fill in the next few months and I think we have to try to slow down our process.

We have a handful of people right now and given the leaks that are occurring in the last week, I actually think we have to shut down the process now to the 1-2 essential posts that need filling soon and build the diverse team we need from there.

These stories will only matter/hurt us if we keep pushing hard and get too much chatter out there.

I think we have to settle on what roles need to be filled immediately and limit our activity to that. If we can create a "silent period" for a couple of weeks and possibly slow down the press appetite we can buy ourselves some space to fill in the team we want and need. This would starving the beast instead of feeding it.

I think as we continue to search, we have to one person assigned to each post, talking to only the people we need to talk and expand that search process when we run into a dead end. It seems clear that multiple people talking to multiple people is not a strategy for containment and containment has to be a top priority for the next six weeks I think.

We face risks with either approach but I think we have seen what happens when we're all reaching out and I don't' think that's getting us where we want.

1) Explains on our own terms who she's meeting and talking with, both in terms of potential campaign hires and policy advisors. She's casting a wide net, looking for the best talent, and listening to people with bold ideas from across the party. Notably, she is specifically reaching out to progressive policy experts and to people in the Obama orbit, demonstrating that she is doing things differently this time. She will be positioned to run a thoughtful, successful, forward-looking and technological advanced campaign, should she decide to run.

2) Provides cover and context for recruiting the best people and appealing to those who are looking for signals about whether this is something that they want to be a part of.

3) Begins to build energy and enthusiasm among Democrats for a forward-looking potential candidacy that will offer a bold vision for the future.

Placing a Story

As discussed on our call, we are all in agreement that the time is right place a story with a friendly journalist in the coming days that positions us a little more transparently while achieving the above goals.

Who*:
For something like this, especially in the absence of us teasing things out to others, we feel that it's important to go with what is safe and what has worked in the past, and to a publication that will reach industry people for recruitment purposes.

We have has a very good relationship with Maggie Haberman of Politico over the last year. We have had her tee up stories for us before and have never been disappointed. While we should have a larger conversation in the near future about a broader strategy for reengaging the beat press that covers HRC, for this we think we can achieve our objective and do the most shaping by going to Maggie.

What:
Mechanically, the story will have three basic components. First, a list of names that we agree upon beforehand that we will give to a reporter on background, both policy people and campaign people. Second, some information provided on background that explains what is happening and why and third, a quote on-the-record that affirms all of this in an official capacity, making clear that this is a sanctioned story.

1) Names:

a. Policy*

i. Joe Stiglitz

ii. Paul Volcker

* More names available if and when it's helpful. And we should revisit if and how to give people a heads up beforehand.

b. Campaign

i. John, Joel, and Robby are already out there

ii. Teddy Goff?

iii. Wendy Clark?

2) On Background as someone familiar with HRC's thinking:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

After the midterms, HRC turned in earnest to thinking through a decision, as she always said she would. She's taking on the two big questions she posed at the end of her book: "What's your vision for America?" and "Can you lead us there?" During the midterm campaign, you heard her lay out a lot of the challenges we face, particularly stagnant incomes and the middle class squeeze that is preventing a lot of Americans from feeling the recovery. So now she's focusing on potential solutions. She's casting a wide net, with a particular emphasis on new voices and new ideas. Talking to Joe Stiglitz about inequality. Talking to Paul Volker about financial reform. When you include outreach by her team, there have been discussions with more than 100 policy experts across the country. As for the second question -- can you lead us there? -- she's also talking to people about what a successful, forward-looking and technological advanced campaign would look like, one that would allow her to have a conversation with the American public about these ideas and do so in innovative ways. And just like on the policy side, she's especially interested in new voices and new talent. It's no accident she's talking to so many people from the Obama orbit. Joel Benenson, for example. If she runs, this is going to be a different kind of campaign, from top to bottom.

3) On the record:

She is thinking through a decision and doing so with a big-tent approach that allows her to hear from lots of people across the Democratic party. She wants to hear new voices and new ideas. She's using this time to look at bold new ideas for helping the middle class and what it would take to build an inclusive, thoughtful and technically advanced campaign, so that if she decides to run, she'll be ready.

When:
Next week probably makes the most sense, but after we have an agreed-upon plan in place we should reconvene early next week by email or phone and make a decision.

Robby, I agree with you about the next discussion needing to be about specific implementation. Towards that end, Nick will reply all with the memo he drafted – which has languished with me, not him. I can do anytime tonight, but a 10pm call two years before Iowa seems a bit much — especially since there won't be anyone left to call us tomorrow, they all hit in one fell swoop this afternoon. So my suggestion is that everyone absorbs Nick's draft overnight, and Marissa Astor sets up a call tomorrow for tomorrow on the early side with the benefit of reading all these stories. Again though, I'm free at 10pm if the group thinks we shouldn't wait. Huma & Robby, entirely up to you.

Since I procrastinated though, I'll just add here what I was going to incorporate: Yes HRC learned from 2008, as she has learned from every experience of her life. But we shouldn't let people forget that 2007 was eight years ago. She has had many experiences since and they have been part of the learning/growing process. So the question of what she will do in 2016 isn't without a basis to answer as if she's been in a coma since she last ran. Look at what she did for President Obama in the general. Look at how she handled his wanting her to join the cabinet. Look at how she did the job of Secretary of State. Look at what she has done since, particularly on the philanthropic front. She has made hundreds of policy, management and personnel decisions over that span, and by and large they've turned out pretty well.

If you want to know what someone is going to do, a good place to start is what they've done. In 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, and 2014.

Also, to be clear, are we reacting to a proposed plan of action or just discussing? I would strongly prefer to react to something because we discussed strategy on our last call and at this point I would like to discuss implementation. There was agreement that we should shape likely leaks in the best light for HRC and supplement with bits of policy that show her focused on helping the MC. I'd like to just move forward in that strategy. Is there a draft of the memo we can see?

Subject:	[big campaign] Chamber push back Catholics United needs advice
Attachments:	Letter to Donohue.pdf letter from the chamber on EFCA.pdf

Hey folks-

Glad to see all this movement on the US Chamber. This past summer, Catholics United wrote a letter to the Tom Donohue, president of the chamber and fellow Catholic. The letter has some pretty good signatures on it. We got a response from the US Chamber's chief counsel rebutting our claims. I haven't been able to figure out how to use this for any earned media. If you have ideas on how and whether to use this, can we find a time to talk?

One thing to remember is that Donohue is acting in direct opposition to the Pope's latest encyclical on global economic justice.

Sincerely,
Js

Dear Mr. Donohue,
As Catholic leaders committed to promoting values of truth, human dignity, and the common good, we urge you to put an end to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's deceptive advertising campaign against the Employee Free Choice Act.
As a fellow Catholic, you are surely aware of our Church's unequivocal support for workers' rights and the dignity of labor. In his 1891 Encyclical Rerum Novarum – the inaugural document of Catholic Social Teaching – Pope Leo XIII affirmed the Church's support for labor unions and the central role they can play in ensuring human dignity in the workplace. In his recent encyclical Caritas in Veritate, Pope Benedict XVI called on Catholics to honor labor "today even more than in the past, as a prompt and far-sighted response to the urgent need for new forms of cooperation at the international level, as well as the local level."
Catholics may disagree in good conscience about whether the Employee Free Choice Act is the best way to realize Church teaching on workers' rights and labor unions. However, this does not excuse the Chamber's use of scare tactics and deception in order to turn the American public against the legislation and demonize those who support it.
Here are some of the distortions to which we object:

The Employee Free Choice Act does not, as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce claims, take away a worker's right to a secret ballot election. It does take away the employer's right to require a secret ballot election when a majority of workers have signed union cards. Elections are still required when less than a majority have signed cards or when workers choose to have an election.

The Chamber purports to oppose the Employee Free Choice Act's binding arbitration provisions on the grounds that outside arbitrators should not resolve contract disputes. However, the Chamber fails to mention that it strongly supports the use of binding arbitration in resolving consumer disputes. Many of your members – such as credit card companies – require customers to waive their right to legal recourse and submit to binding arbitration even before conflicts arise.

The Chamber claims that instituting harsher penalties for employers who violate workers' rights will place an undue burden on U.S. businesses. In reality, these penalties will correct a system that presently encourages such violations. The best way for employers to avoid penalties is to follow the law and respect the rights of their workers.

Perhaps the most disturbing aspect of the Chamber's advertising campaign is its lack of recognition of the injustices the Employee Free Choice Act is intended to remedy. Each year, tens of thousands of U.S. workers are subjected to harassment and intimidation in the workplace because they exercised their legal and moral right to form a union, and many of the perpetrators of these injustices are members of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. This situation is untenable by any reasonable Catholic or American standard.

In light of Pope Benedict's renewal of the Church's commitment to organized labor, we respectfully ask that you discontinue any anti-Employee Free Choice Act advertising that is currently underway, refrain from future deceptive messaging on the legislation, and correct the misleading information that is currently posted on the Chamber's Web site.

Subject: [big campaign] 88% Of Chamber Board $ Goes to GOP and Corporations Importance: High

In light of the Chamber's unflattering close-up this morning, I wanted to make sure you saw this new breakdown of political contributions from its board members from ThinkProgress -- which shows that fully 88% of their political contributions go to either Republicans or big corporation.

More data and charts at the link. -Adam

http://thinkprogress.org/2009/11/14/chamber-of-gop/

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which purports to be "the voice of business ," is run by a Republican money machine. As the nation's largest lobbying shop, the Chamber is spending millions of dollars from its corporate members against President Obama's progressive agenda of health care , energy , and financial reform . The Chamber claims that the "board's membership is as diverse as the nation's business community itself," but this is false. A ThinkProgress analysis of federal election contribution data compiled by the LittleSis project has found that the Chamber's 116-member board of directors has given more than six times as much money to Republican candidates and committees ($4,741,747) as it has to Democrats ($778,282), with $1,074,697 flowing to corporate political action committees:

The top beneficiary of this outpouring of conservative cash is the Republican National Committee, which has received over ten times as much money from the Chamber's board as the Democratic National Committee — $1,257,201 versus $102,950. Contributions went 4.5 to 1 for John McCain ($373,150) versus Barack Obama

Of the board's 116 members, 96 have made major political contributions. Sixty-eight directly contributed to the campaigns of George W. Bush or John McCain. In contrast, only 27 gave to the campaigns of Al Gore, John Kerry, or Barack Obama. Forty-seven board members, including Chamber of Commerce president Tom Donohue, have contributed more than 90 percent to Republicans, averaging $74,634 in GOP contributions. Only seven members have contributed more than 90 percent to Democrats, averaging $3,529 to Democrats.

The political giving is dominated by leading Republican billionaire George Argyros , the Bush pioneer who served a disastrous term as the U.S. ambassador to Spain. Argyros is also one of the top backers of Newt Gingrich's right-wing American Solutions for Winning the Future. The following visualization of Chamber of Commerce board member contributions is a sea of red surrounding a few small islands of blue. The size of each box is proportional to amount of total contributions per person, with the shading indicating percentage of Republican versus Democratic contributions:

to Challenge Republican Efforts to Undercut Climate Action on Press Conference Call

Podesta to Criticize Tuesday Senate Subcommittee Hearing Where Chairman Ted Cruz Will Use Taxpayer Dollars to Question Settled Climate Science

On Monday afternoon, Hillary for America Chair John Podesta will convene a press conference call to criticize ongoing Republican efforts to undermine action to combat climate change. The call comes during the final week of the United Nations Climate Change Conference in Paris, where world leaders are gathering to forge a global agreement to tackle climate change. Podesta will highlight the stark contrast between the leadership on display in Paris with the backward focus of leading Republican presidential candidates.

Podesta will specifically decry Ted Cruz's decision to convene a Senate Commerce Subcommittee on Space, Science, and Competitiveness hearing with the apparent intent to raise doubts about settled climate science. The hearing will feature witness testimony from four prominent climate change skeptics.

Podesta will take questions following his remarks.

Prime Minister Abe has already visited 49 countries, more than any previous Japanese leader, issued a National Security Strategy covering diplomacy as well as defense, and is attempting to redefine Japan's global role as a proactive contributor to peace. Currently Mr. Abe's tenure as Prime Minister looks secure enough to allow him to bring many of his policies to fruition.

What have been the major foreign policy accomplishments and issues of the Abe administration since its inception in December 2012? What are its foreign policy goals and priorities going forward? How does the government's foreign policy interact with its economic objectives?

Please join the Sasakawa Peace Foundation USA to discuss these and other questions with the Honorable KeizoTakemi, Liberal Democratic Party Member of the Japanese House of Councillors and an important voice on foreign policy

The event will take place on October 8 at 12pm at The Occidental Grill & Seafood (475 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20004).

This is a public event. Seating is limited and will be allocated on a first-come, first-served basis.

About Keizo Takemi

Keizo Takemi is a member of Japan's House of Councillors. Takemi served initially in the House of Councillors from 1995 to 2007, and was State Secretary for Foreign Affairs in 1999. He returned to the Diet in December 2012. In the intervening years, from November 2007 to June 2009, he was a research fellow at the Harvard School of Public Health. During his previous tenure in the Diet, he served in the first Abe cabinet as Senior Vice Minister for Health, Labor and Welfare. He led the initiative to establish the UN Trust Fund for Human Security and was later named by former UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan a member of the High Level Panel on UN System-Wide Coherence in Areas of Development, Humanitarian Assistance and Environment. Since September 2007, he has been serving as the chair of a public-private partnership for global health, known as the study group on "Challenges in Global Health and Agree with all that's been said. Would be good to have HRC do a Univision interview soon and say something to English media.

Amanda, myself, and others can also be on SLM delivering the message. Other surrogates can really hammer the GOP and make this about the Party of Trump. It's about condemning Trump and the lack of R leadership. It's not just his comments, but the policy implications that all the Rs agree with.

Espuelas is on Face the Nation (see below)- if we have a good relationship with him, can we make sure he's seen what HRC has said on this ?

(Face the Nation": Sen. Bob Corker ... Sen. Amy Klobuchar ... Rick Santorum ... Panel: Mike Allen, Ruth "The Truth" Marcus, Peter Baker and talk-show host Fernando Espuelas)

Other thoughts:
-Do we have anyone going on TV this weekend?
-Thinking about the early 4, there is the Trump International Hotel in Vegas. Maybe there is an organizing opportunity next week. Would be good to reach out to UNITE HERE.
-Online: Engage Latinos and give them something to do so we can galvanize them against the GOP and affirm their values for the contributions they make. And let them know that we stand with them--that the platform of HRC is the platform that stands with Latinos and lifts up their contributions.

Dear John,

As the Senate prepares to begin debate on a clean energy bill in the coming weeks, Big Oil and Dirty Coal are ramping up their efforts to sabotage it. And they're getting plenty of high-profile help.

Oil-loving members of Congress like John Boehner and Michele Bachmann and talking heads like Glenn Beck and Newt Gingrich are dishing out some of the most outrageous claims about the clean energy bill we've heard yet.

Clean energy opponents are dancing hand-in-hand with Big Oil.

Click here to see our new video – and vote for the one you think is best at doing Big Oil's dance!

Opponents of clean energy are dancing hand-in-hand with Big Oil around the issue. Now, LCV has compiled the best of their absurd claims into a new video – complete with Newt Gingrich break dancing, and Glenn Beck doing...well, we're not sure what exactly.

Click here to watch the video, then vote for the dancer who you think is best at doing Big Oil's dirty work.

Big Polluters spent nearly $120 million in the first two quarters of 2009 alone to defeat clean energy legislation. As if that's not enough, they're getting help from some in Congress and in the media who are spreading misinformation about clean energy legislation in order to keep us dependent on the same failed energy policies of the past.

When the House of Representatives passed the American Clean Energy and Security Act of 2009 in June, this historic legislation put us closer than ever to getting our country on a path to a clean energy future. It was a huge step, but just the first one.

We can't let Big Oil, Dirty Coal and their cohorts stop us now. That is why we must get the word out about their tactics and stop them in their tracks.

Watch the video, vote, and spread the word!

As always, we will keep you informed of our progress on passing clean energy legislation in the Senate, and ways you can help make it happen.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski

Subject: Poll: 48-47

John,

Unbelievable. Hours after he made his official decision to stay in the Missouri Senate race, Todd Akin said Senator Claire McCaskill was more “ladylike” in 2006.

It’s demeaning, but not surprising – not from the guy who spoke of “legitimate rape.”

But here’s the reality. The latest poll has him ahead of Claire by one point. The Republican leaders who called on him to drop out have backtracked. They’re so desperate to take the Senate that they’re now funding vitriolic attacks against Claire.

We have to help her fight back. Please give directly to Claire’s campaign and help her raise $75,000 before the September 30 FEC deadline. This race is too close to let Akin win.

Click here to donate to Claire’s campaign before the deadline just 2 days away. We need to ensure our Senate is controlled by Democrats – and free of people like Akin.

When I first heard Akin defending his absolutist stance against abortion, I was shocked. He actually said that “the female body has ways to try to shut that whole [pregnancy] thing down.”

I hoped those words would make it impossible for him to win. But when you’ve got a Republican Party that will do anything to win the Senate, they’ll support anyone with an “R” after their name – no matter how reprehensible his beliefs.

That means it’s up to us – you and me – to make sure Todd Akin does not win in Missouri. But we have to do it now, before the big September 30 FEC filing deadline. We really don’t have a minute to lose.

Click here to contribute directly to Claire’s campaign so she can raise $75,000 before the deadline just 2 days away.

I take remarks like Akin’s very personally. So I’m going to do everything I can to make sure he’s defeated. How about you?

Thanks for your help,

Kirsten

Governor Brown Establishes Most Ambitious Greenhouse Gas Reduction Target in North America

New California Goal Aims to Reduce Emissions 40 Percent Below 1990 Levels by 2030

SACRAMENTO – Governor Edmund G. Brown Jr. today issued an executive order to establish a California greenhouse gas reduction target of 40 percent below 1990 levels by 2030 – the most aggressive benchmark enacted by any government in North America to reduce dangerous carbon emissions over the next decade and a half.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"With this order, California sets a very high bar for itself and other states and nations, but it's one that must be reached – for this generation and generations to come," said Governor Brown.

This executive action sets the stage for the important work being done on climate change by the Legislature.

The Governor's executive order aligns California's greenhouse gas reduction targets with those of leading international governments ahead of the United Nations Climate Change Conference in Paris later this year. The 28-nation European Union, for instance, set the same target for 2030 just last October.

California is on track to meet or exceed the current target of reducing greenhouse gas emissions to 1990 levels by 2020, as established in the California Global Warming Solutions Act of 2006 (AB 32). California's new emission reduction target of 40 percent below 1990 levels by 2030 will make it possible to reach the ultimate goal of reducing emissions 80 percent under 1990 levels by 2050. This is in line with the scientifically established levels needed in the U.S. to limit global warming below 2 degrees Celsius – the warming threshold at which scientists say there will likely be major climate disruptions such as super droughts and rising sea levels.

World Leaders React

United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change Executive Secretary Christiana Figueres: "California and Governor Brown have clearly understood, internalised and articulated the science of climate change and today have aligned the state to the growing global understanding of the step changes and strategies needed over the coming years and decades. Resolving climate change requires a swift peaking of emissions and a deep decarbonisation of the global economy by the second half of the century. California's announcement is a realisation and a determination that will gladly resonate with other inspiring actions within the United States and around the globe. It is yet another reason for optimism in advance of the UN climate conference in Paris in December."

World Bank Group President Jim Yong Kim: "Four consecutive years of exceptional drought has brought home the harsh reality of rising global temperatures to the communities and businesses of California. There can be no substitute for aggressive national targets to reduce harmful greenhouse emissions, but the decision today by Governor Brown to set a 40 percent reduction target for 2030 is an example of climate leadership that others must follow."

Premier of Ontario, Canada Kathleen Wynne: "I applaud Governor Brown's continued leadership on climate change. This shows the important role that sub-national governments can play in shaping a strong global agreement on climate change later this year in Paris."

Former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg: "California's 2030 goal to reduce carbon emissions is not only bold, it's necessary – for the economy and our future."

NextGen Climate Founder Tom Steyer: "When it comes to climate change, California has emerged as a global leader – proving that we don't have to choose between a healthy environment and a strong economy. Today Governor Brown took that leadership to the next level. By setting an ambitious and achievable target to reduce emissions of climate-altering pollutants 40 percent by 2030, Governor Brown is setting a course that will build upon the hundreds of thousands of good paying advanced energy jobs in California, improve the health and wellbeing of Californians and continue our global leadership to solve the greatest challenge of our generation."

Princeton University Professor Michael Oppenheimer: "Governor Brown's ground-breaking commitment not only shows that solving the climate problem goes hand-in-hand with economic growth and technology leadership, but points the way toward a climate solution for other states and the world."

Climate Adaptation

The executive order also specifically addresses the need for climate adaptation and directs state government to:

Incorporate climate change impacts into the state's Five-Year Infrastructure Plan;
Update the Safeguarding California Plan – the state climate adaption strategy – to identify how climate change will affect California infrastructure and industry and what actions the state can take to reduce the risks posed by climate change;
Factor climate change into state agencies' planning and investment decisions; and Implement measures under existing agency and departmental authority to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

California's Response to Climate Change

In his inaugural address earlier this year, Governor Brown announced that within the next 15 years,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

California will increase from one-third to 50 percent our electricity derived from renewable sources; reduce today's petroleum use in cars and trucks by up to 50 percent; double the efficiency savings from existing buildings and make heating fuels cleaner; reduce the release of methane, black carbon and other potent pollutants across industries; and manage farm and rangelands, forests and wetlands so they can store carbon.

Since taking office, Governor Brown has signed accords to fight climate change with leaders from Mexico , China , Canada , Japan , Israel and Peru . The Governor also issued a groundbreaking call to action with hundreds of world-renowned researchers and scientists – called the consensus statement – which translates key scientific climate findings from disparate fields into one unified document. The impacts of climate change are already being felt in California and will disproportionately impact the state's most vulnerable populations.

The text of the executive order is below:

Executive Department

State of California

EXECUTIVE ORDER B-30-15

WHEREAS climate change poses an ever-growing threat to the well-being, public health, natural resources, economy, and the environment of California, including loss of snowpack, drought, sea level rise, more frequent and intense wildfires, heat waves, more severe smog, and harm to natural and working lands, and these effects are already being felt in the state; and

WHEREAS the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change concluded in its Fifth Assessment Report, issued in 2014, that "[w]arming of the climate system is unequivocal, and since the 1950s, many of the observed changes are unprecedented over decades to millennia" and that "[c]ontinued emission of greenhouse gases will cause further warming and long-lasting changes in all components of the climate system, increasing the likelihood of severe, pervasive and irreversible impacts for people and ecosystems;" and

WHEREAS projections of climate change show that, even under the best-case scenario for global emission reductions, additional climate change impacts are inevitable, and these impacts pose tremendous risks to the state's people, agriculture, economy, infrastructure and the environment; and

WHEREAS climate change will disproportionately affect the state's most vulnerable citizens; and

WHEREAS building on decades of successful actions to reduce pollution and increase energy efficiency the California Global Warming Solutions Act of 2006 placed California at the forefront of global and national efforts to reduce the threat of climate change; and

WHEREAS the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change has identified limiting global warming to 2 degrees Celsius or less by 2050 as necessary to avoid potentially catastrophic climate change impacts, and remaining below this threshold requires accelerated reductions of greenhouse gas emissions; and

WHEREAS California has established greenhouse gas emission reduction targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to 1990 levels by 2020 and further reduce such emissions to 80 percent below 1990 levels by 2050; and

WHEREAS setting an interim target of emission reductions for 2030 is necessary to guide regulatory policy and investments in California in the midterm, and put California on the most cost-effective path for long term emission reductions; and

WHEREAS all agencies with jurisdiction over sources of greenhouse gas emissions will need to continue to develop and implement emissions reduction programs to reach the state's 2050 target and attain a level of emissions necessary to avoid dangerous climate change; and

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WHEREAS taking climate change into account in planning and decision making will help the state make more informed decisions and avoid high costs in the future.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, EDMUND G. BROWN JR., Governor of the State of California, in accordance with the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes of the State of California, in particular Government Code sections 8567 and 8571 of the California Government Code, do hereby issue this Executive Order, effective immediately

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

1. A new interim statewide greenhouse gas emission reduction target to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to 40 percent below 1990 levels by 2030 is established in order to ensure California meets its target of reducing greenhouse gas emissions to 80 percent below 1990 levels by 2050.

2. All state agencies with jurisdiction over sources of greenhouse gas emissions shall implement measures, pursuant to statutory authority, to achieve reductions of greenhouse gas emissions to meet the 2030 and 2050 greenhouse gas emissions reductions targets.

3. The California Air Resources Board shall update the Climate Change Scoping Plan to express the 2030 target in terms of million metric tons of carbon dioxide equivalent.

4. The California Natural Resources Agency shall update every three years the state's climate adaptation strategy, Safeguarding California, and ensure that its provisions are fully implemented. The Safeguarding California plan will:

    - Identify vulnerabilities to climate change by sector and regions, including, at a minimum, the following sectors: water, energy, transportation, public health, agriculture, emergency services, forestry, biodiversity and habitat, and ocean and coastal resources;

    - Outline primary risks to residents, property, communities and natural systems from these vulnerabilities, and identify priority actions needed to reduce these risks; and

    - Identify a lead agency or group of agencies to lead adaptation efforts in each sector.

5. Each sector lead will be responsible to:

    - Prepare an implementation plan by September 2015 to outline the actions that will be taken as identified in Safeguarding California, and

    - Report back to the California Natural Resources Agency by June 2016 on actions taken.

6. State agencies shall take climate change into account in their planning and investment decisions, and employ full life-cycle cost accounting to evaluate and compare infrastructure investments and alternatives.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

7. State agencies' planning and investment shall be guided by the following principles

    - Priority should be given to actions that both build climate preparedness and reduce greenhouse gas emissions;
    - Where possible, flexible and adaptive approaches should be taken to prepare for uncertain climate impacts;
    - Actions should protect the state's most vulnerable populations; and
    - Natural infrastructure solutions should be prioritized.

Hi John,

If it still is a good day for you I am free for a bit to get together but do need to be at the Willard at 2pm or we can try for later in the week if that is better for you.

Had a good convo with Brandon Davis at SEIU. Notes below

1. Told them it's likely we will do something in California and we are just finalizing. They are excited. Ann, I got your document last night on the type of roundtable. Once we get a date set we can start working with them on that.

2. Also relayed that HRC can't meet with one local cause then it'll expand into other locals. He understood. He is advocating for some call time for some of their local leaders from her, my guess is particularly George Gresham at 1199. Not sure how we feel about call time. He said it was really important but John, you may want to check with Mary Kay on that.

3. I asked if the event replaced an exec committee meeting. He said that's a priority (the event) but not necessarily replace. He said if HRC ever did time in DC, he would love to pull together some members for a discussion, not necessarily exec committee, but doesn't want to rule that out.

My two cents are we do the Cali event and do something with them in DC. I'm torn on call time but would love everyone's thoughts on that. I want to make sure I set realistic expectations with them.

On "just the two of us" don't you get in trouble when you put it on TV. Aren't the rules less restrictive for internet ads? Couldn't we release it as such? And maybe put out the mcsame script and audio and let "just the two of us" be what try to get on tv/ web?

William Rivers Pitt | George W. Bush: The Gift That Keeps on Giving

William Rivers Pitt, Truthout: As it turns out, there were weapons of mass destruction in that shattered, battered and bombed-out nation of Iraq - just not in the way it was explained to us. It was revealed this week that the country was littered with thousands of chemical munitions the United States and other countries had sold to Iraq before 1991.

Tikkun { tē-kün } to heal, repair, and transform the world

Editor's note: Our Tikkun contributing writer David Sylvester offers us a contemporary and super-shortened update and transformation to Dickens' A Christmas Carol, but it's not just for Christians, and it addresses our hopes for the New Year. See what parts of his fantasy could be yours as you make your own New Year's resolutions using our TIKKUN mantra, "Don't be realistic -- go for your highest visions of the world you really want." Meanwhile, may we all have a healthy, love-filled and transformative 2016 -- Rabbi Michael Lerner.

All December, the pressure had been building, and something inside was about to explode, and maybe this time I wouldn't make it through this one last week, and I'd wind up leaving cerebral spaghetti all over the walls, and there I was, trying to keep it together in line at Starbucks, and the baristas had the spirit too. They were furiously pumping out the espressos and steaming up the hot milk, but the addicts were edgy, so the manager cranked up the mechanical music until the speakers were thundering and crackling with "MURRRRRRY MURRRYYY CHRIZZZZZZZZZMUZZZZ....," -- and it was like this electronic avalanche was crashing down on my shoulders, and I was crouching low to escape it, while sliding some dollar bills across the counter to the cashier and mouthing: "L-A-T-T-E." She took my money and gave me the look. She got it. Holiday Trauma.

I turned from the counter and found myself waiting outside in the parking lot, jostled back and forth by invisible elbows, and just past the fences, the cars and trucks were stopped dead on Interstate 880 like a locomotive off its rails, everyone trying to head south toward four different shopping malls. I could hear the muffled wailing of the children trapped inside the cars, dying to go to the new Episode VII of Star Wars instead shopping for borrriiing things, and I sensed the moms were gritting their teeth, because after all, for Chrissake, all the work it takes to keep everyone happy, and the significant others was just sitting there, staring at the red taillights, lost in a fog, thinking about work and their administrative assistants.

I was really needing my latte, and so I tried to head back inside, but a dozen people surged around me, pushing into my arms these multi-colored boxes of the things I didn't want or need, and my arms were sagging, and some in the crowd began to sneer at my ingratitude, and others were envious because I was getting so much, so they started ripping the boxes from my hands and tearing at the colored paper, and the door to Starbucks opened, and the loudspeakers roared forth with, "HAAAVE A HAAAAPPPPYYY HAAPPPPPY NUUUUUUUU ...," and if this is the way the old year ends, then heaven help us for the New Year, but it didn't matter because I was falling to the pavement at the feet of the mob. Then with a scream, I woke.

I was in bed.

I was sitting upright, the blankets twisted around my waist, my hair and neck wet with sweat, the sun shining through the windows.

All the world was silent.

I rubbed my face. What a nightmare! Or was it? Was I now I falling asleep into a new dream? Maybe I'm dreaming that I'm awake.

I tossed back the blankets, threw on some clothes and bounded down the stairs to find myself on the sidewalk among families with picnic baskets headed for Lake Merritt in the center of downtown. "Come with us," they urged. "Come, spend time with us!" I fell in step with a Chinese family speaking perfect Korean with their Japanese neighbors and marveled that I could respond in fluent, although overly formal, Korean.

We were walking along International Avenue, one of the busiest streets in Oakland, now empty of cars but full of people sauntering along, enjoying the sunshine and warm air of late December. The lake came into view, a spectacular salt-water inlet of 150 acres in sight of skyscrapers and high-rise condominium towers, sparkling and alive with gulls and egrets. Along its grass banks, everyone was sharing picnic baskets and chatting happily about the afternoon concerts at the Children's Fairyland park on the other side. The day felt so fresh and inviting that I chose to take the eastern loop, a three-mile stroll past the high-rises along Lakeshore Avenue to my right and the picnicking people and the lake to my left. They were smiling and nodding at me and offering portions of their traditional lunches from around the world: the cultures of the Laotians and Vietnamese, Iranians and Iraqis, Yemenis and Saudis, Mexicans and Guatemalans, African and European Americans.

From underneath the porticoes of the luxury apartment towers , some of the homeless who had lived among the bushes were now coming out dressed in their Sunday best, cracking jokes with the security guards who had invited them in for a shower and breakfast with the tower residents. They were carrying plastic bags and spread out to collect people's trash. A hunched African American woman - the one on Piedmont Avenue who sat on an overturned milk crate, the one I always avoided when she asked me for change -- took my hand in her bony fingers, and grinned up at me and led me toward the wonderful smell of cooking coming from the blue-and-white awnings where the Islamic Cultural Center and Temple Sinai were serving baba ghanoush, borscht, falafel and latkes,

"You have to try these latkes, honey, they are just the bomb!" my new friend told me.

"But I have no money," I whispered to her.

"Nothing to worry about, sweetie! I already paid for it."

"You?"

"Sure," she said with an easy smile. "All of us from the street are treating y'all today, baby."

She saw that I was staring at her perfectly straightened, shining teeth.

"You bad boy! You thinking I look good enough to kiss, now aren't you!" she grinned again and struck an exaggerated movie-star pose. "Get yourself over to Kaiser for free medical care and dental work, you hear me?"

"Free medical care?"

"Honey, where you been? Don't you read the newspapers?" she pulled back with a stern gaze, reaching for a copy of the New York Times off the table and putting it in my hand. "Lookee 'ere!"

"Wow, this is a surprise," I gushed.

"What are you, Rip Van Winkle? We've been expecting this for months!"

In the Times' left column, the Apologies & Corrections section had a letter from former reporter Judith Miller apologizing for her false reports on the alleged weapons of mass destruction in Iraq and offering to testify before the Truth & Reconciliation Commission.

From Bagdad, columnist Tom Friedman had a story that the U.S. reparations payments to Iraq had gone over budget, and Iraq's Sunni-Shiite coalition government was offering some of the surplus payments to help reconstruction in Yemen.

From Gaza City, its Bureau Chief Jodi Rudoren had a report about the home rebuilding programs in the Shuja'iyyah neighborhood, the apartment towers under construction in the city's downtown and new schools in Rafah, all funded by the Jewish National Fund. Along with this, she posted a personal reflection on the needs of the Gaza family with whom she was staying.

The sound of a television distracted me from the newspaper, and I looked up to see a 36-inch monitor televising the joint session of the Knesset and Hamas. There were some discussion about a plan for Jerusalem as the capital of the new federated republic, but an enterprising cameraman was more interested in the tête-à-tête between Binyamin Netanyahu and Khaled Mashaal who were leaning toward each other from their seats. Their whispering had been picked up by a table microphone that someone had left on by mistake.

Underneath, CSPAN was streaming captions of the conversation that clearly followed the murmuring of their voices:

"Those suicide bombings and rocket attacks were so stupid of us!" Mashaal was grumbling. "What did we get? Nothing but the West Bank wall and Gaza invasions!"

"Don't be so hard on yourself, Khaled," Netanyahu said. "What could you do, hemmed in like that? "The IDF infantry and tanks at your border, our F-16 bombers overhead and naval gunboats sealing your coastline."

"Yes, I know, but you should hear what our young people are saying. 'If Islam is a religion of peace,' they say, 'then where are our Badshah Khan, the "Frontier Gandhi" of the Pashtun Muslims who resisted British repression with nonviolence? They are even questioning Islam! Because of us!"

"You think you have problems? How are we going to explain that whole 'mowing the grass' bombing campaign of your neighborhoods to future generations of Jews? We were entering the month of Elul, the month of 'divine mercy and forgiveness' -- the week after we bombed four of your apartment towers. How legitimate will Israel's actions appear to the young Jews who take seriously the Torah's injunction to "love the stranger?"

"You know, Bibi, we could have sorted all this out, but you never call, you never write..."

"What could I do? You encrypted your cell phone number!"

"In the name of Allah, where is your Mossad when you need it! Here's my private number for half-brother cousins and other family ... "

Just then, they looked up and noticed the camera and sat up quickly, although it looked like Mashaal had passed Netanyahu a slip of paper under the table.

"Amazing," I said to myself, while I finished my falafel and picked up a latke from a large man in a black bushy beard and Muslim cap. He waved away any money.

"As-salamu alaykum!" I found myself saying, wondering how I knew Arabic. I kept on strolling and found at the far end of the lake, the Roman Catholic parishioners of Our Lady of Lourdes attending the free Hebrew lessons at the Chabad open house next doo r so they could understand the Shema prayer -- "Shema, Yisrael, Adonai eloheinu, Adonai echad. - that Jesus recited in the Gospel of Mark 12: 29-31. Some even tried to sing the complicated "v'ahavta et Adonai Elohecha, b'chol l'vavcha uv'chol nafsh'cha uv'cholm'odecha."

At the tip of the lake, fans of the new Star Wars were going crazy around the Grand Lake

Theaterin anticipation of the chance to donate the cost of their tickets to new Syrian refugee program headed by Donald Trump, candidate for the Peace & Freedom Party. His lobbying effort was credited for the extra funding for Syrians to settle in any country they chose or to travel free back to help rebuild Homs and Aleppo under the reconstruction programs sponsored by his non-profit, Trump International.

One young man in a Darth Vader costume was carried on the shoulders of a Luke Skywalker, booming: "Imagine! In one week, we raised $1 billion world-wide ! We just had to wait until summer when this Star Wars comes out on DVD. Now that's the Force with us!"

"Who would think so much money could come out of nowhere like this!" I marveled to the young people near me.

"Ah, man, that's nuthin'." said one of the Star Wars fans. "We're on our way to greet the new Central American families arriving in Oakland today. There's a long waiting list to host a family. You interested?"

"I would, but my place is pretty small, I'm afraid," I replied.

"Shoot, what's wrong with you? No one says that anymore..."

I tried to think of something to say, but they had already disappeared. I was clearly not someone to hang with.

I kept following the paths along the lake toward Children's Fairyland and was soon in the midst of young African American and Hispanic men with pants bagging down and bumping fists and carrying each other's children on their shoulders for the hip - hop concert put by noted artist "Gangbanga' No Mo'. " Proceeds were being donated to the on by the Four Square Evangelical Gospel Church on behalf of the lesbian-gay-bisexual-transgender marriage equality alliance.

"So many people!" I asked one man, carrying two young children in his arms. "How does everyone get here? Bus?"

"Hell no!" He was huffing under his load, and his smile showed all his gold bling. "We all wanna walk, man.... Healthier!. And besides, what's the point of doing time for using carbon fuels? Renewables are what's on, you know.... Solar, wind, hydro... Exxon, Chevron, BP... That's all they're doing these days."

"You mean there are no more refineries, no oil drilling, not even coal mining? That was fast!"

"Where have you been? Ted Cruz has been talking up a storm 'bout the dangers of capitalism and carbon emissions putting a chokehold on our Mother Earth. He's gotten all the evangelicals behind a new Department of Economic Cooperation and Mutual Interdependency."

"But the sea levels are rising..."

"No, no, no, that's ancient history," said a young mother pushing a stroller and falling into step with us. "The Greenland ice sheets are freezing over, and Antarctica is reforming. Sea levels are back to the average of multi-millennial levels."

"Now that's a real miracle!"

"Oh, come now, you don't believe in miracles, do you? It's all a question of natural cause-and-effect. That's what Rev. Franklin Graham is telling us."

What new world is this? I wondered, as I left them to their concert so I could head back home under a fine and gentle rain falling from a blue and cloudless sky. "Not more rain!" our apartment manager was shouting on the sidewalk. He pulled me aside, his face happy but urgent. "The reservoirs are overflowing! Tell everyone to drink more water!"

Back home, around my dining table, my children, ex-wife and her new husband and extended families were gathering for our annual reconciliation dinner where we told our favorite divorce jokes. I was recollecting the time my ex-wife's new husband's ex-wife brought my daughter's new step-sister to work so she could ask her mother's ex-husband's new wife's ex-husband about employment internships. Of course, the children rolled their eyeballs and shook their heads in mock boredom at the same old stories.

As they were leaving after dinner, we all exclaimed:

"What a wonderful holiday it's been!"

The youngest son asked his father:

"Daddy, why is this holiday different from all other holidays?"

"Today is the holiday we all were liberated from our compulsion to say "No" and gained the freedom and courage to say 'Yes'."

" 'Yes' to what, Daddy?"

"To our dreams, the things deepest in our hearts, the things trying to be born every day in our most innocent selves."

"And what will tomorrow be like?"

"I guess that all depends us. Can we keep saying 'Yes' to our hearts deepest desires?"

Yes John, this is still me! Sorry to be slow in responding, we are in your native Greece with Steinberg, Bennett and others for Antholis' 50th.

Lindsay: we would be thrilled to have HRC in the Rose City in August. Mary Ellen and I are happy to help. We had hoped to get John but would love to see the candidate!

One strategy, which I was going to persue if we got John: see if Rick Miller would host at his home on Jantzen Island. This may not be what you want to do - he is newly a democrat, so it a base guy - but he is close to Sen Wyden and I feel sure he'd be eager to help. He owned a chain of 60 nursing homes, was a centrist R, and changed to Dem in anticipation of running for office...he has lots and lots of capacity (he recently gave my non profit 100k), but also lots of demands - in fact I think he's doing something for Ron in August (but Ron would likely cede way to HRC).

Anyway, that's just one idea, there are lots of different ways to go, and we will help in anyway we can. We can corale the statewide elected as promptly if that's helpful, etc.

We are in Greece till June 30 but can talk before then if helpful. We are 7 hours ahead of Brooklyn.

Hope to see you! Kalispera to Mary, John!

This morning, MoveOn launched a petition calling on Congress to quickly pass Obama's plan to invest in clean energy, green jobs, health care, and relief for struggling states -- and not in more tax cuts for the rich.

Check it out, below.

MoveOn members will deliver the petition signatures to members of Congress at in-district offices on Wednesday.

Let me know if you have any questions.

Subject: This morning's news

Dear MoveOn member,

The bad news: As of this morning, unemployment hit a 16-year high. We're in trouble.[1]

The good news: Yesterday, President-elect Obama laid out a bold plan for how to get us out of this economic crisis and invest in 3 million jobs. It's smart and progressive—doubling clean energy production, providing health care for laid-off workers, and offering real relief to struggling states.[2]

But the most important parts are already under attack by oil and health insurance lobbyists, joined by congressional conservatives who want to replace these progressive provisions with tax cuts for the rich.[3]

Only a massive public outcry will get Obama's plan passed intact. Can you sign our petition to Congress to pass Obama's economic plan right away? Click here to add your name:

http://pol.moveon.org/economy/o.pl?id=&t=3

In a few days, MoveOn members across the nation will deliver the petition signatures to the local offices of key undecided lawmakers, so every signature is crucial!

The petition says: "Congress should quickly pass Obama's plan to invest in clean energy, green jobs, health care, and relief for struggling states. No more tax cuts for the rich."

The investments Obama wants to make are the most effective way to stimulate the economy in the short-term and invest for the long-term:

- doubling clean energy production in three year;
- building a smart electric grid to distribute clean energy;
- weatherizing federal buildings and homes;
- creating millions of new green jobs;
- helping laid-off workers afford health care; and
- making sure struggling cities and states don't have to slash services.[4]

Clicking here will sign your name:

"Congress should quickly pass Obama's plan to invest in clean energy, green jobs, health care, and relief for struggling states. No more tax cuts for the rich."

Sign the petition

Thank you!

Last week, MoveOn members, along with the Open Society Institute and Atlantic Philanthropies, helped raise $1,651,517(!!!) for 4 progressive organizations hurt by the Madoff scam: Human Rights Watch, Center for Constitutional Rights, Advancement Project, and the Brennan Center for Justice. Thanks so much!

But conservatives in Congress are countering Obama's plan with a proposal for more tax cuts that will primarily benefit the wealthy,[5] even though, as Nobel Prize-winning economist Paul Krugman affirms, "public investment is a much better way to provide economic stimulus than tax cuts."[6]

And energy industry lobbyists are quietly working behind the scenes to kill some of the most important green jobs provisions in the bill.

All the bickering is severely delaying Obama's plan, which he originally hoped to pass by Inauguration Day. As Obama said yesterday, if we don't act in time, "a bad situation could become dramatically worse."[7]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And it's not just the economy that could suffer. If Obama doesn't win big on this first fight, he won't have the political momentum to keep going on health care, clean energy, and ending the war in Iraq.

Can you get Obama's back by urging Congress to pass his economic recovery plan immediately? Clicking here will add your name:

20 career Foreign Service officers.

These Foreign Service officers are career diplomats. They are some of the finest people in our government.

And they are brave. Many of these Foreign Service officers stand ready to serve at a moment's notice in hotspots throughout the world, like Iraq or Afghanistan.

These diplomats are not partisan. They are not political appointments. That is why it's so troubling to see the senior Senator from Iowa politicize their promotions.

Senator Grassley admits that he is blocking the promotion of these Foreign Service officers until he gets answers about Secretary Hillary Clinton's emails and her aide, Huma Abedin.

I've told Senator Grassley that he's making a mistake by targeting career Foreign Service officials.

But instead of changing course and doing what's right by these 20 career diplomats, Senator Grassley seems to be doubling down on his obstruction.

And as the senior Senator from Iowa digs in on this failed policy, more innocent diplomats are being caught in the resulting backlog.

Last month, the Senate received several lists containing more than 600 Foreign Service promotions. In years past, the Senate would have passed that list quickly, without opposition.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But times have changed, and these lists of 600 career Foreign Service Officers sit unpassed before the Senate.

Among the 600 individuals on these promotions lists are two Iowans. That's right, two of Senator Grassley's own constituents are being denied a promotion.

Why are non-partisan public servants being used as political pawns? Especially if they're being blocked just because Senator Grassley doesn't want Hillary Clinton to be the next President of the United States. He would rather have Trump, Carson, Cruz, Rubio, Bush or Christie in the White House.

So I ask the senior Senator from Iowa, is he blocking two of his own constituents?

Senator Grassley should allow all of the Foreign Service lists to be confirmed by the Senate without further delay. In fact, we should confirm them tonight.

It is time for my friend from Iowa to end these foolish campaigns to undermine Secretary Clinton. Under Senator Grassley's leadership, the Judiciary Committee continues to hound the State Department for information about Secretary Clinton and her staffers.

He and his fellow Republicans want emails. They want to see timesheets for State Department employees. Committee staff want transcribed interviews with email vendors. And they want maternity leave records for one of Secretary Clinton's closest aides, Huma Abedin.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Think about that: Republicans want to know how long a member of Secretary Clinton's staff took for her maternity leave. It's ludicrous.

Those who know Ms. Abedin best can vouch for her integrity and her work ethic as a close aide to Secretary Clinton for decades. When Ms. Abedin's reputation was attacked in the past, Republicans like Senator John McCain defended her.

Senator McCain said that she was:

> "an intelligent, upstanding, hard-working, loyal servant of our country… the daughter of immigrants who has risen to the highest levels of our government on her substantial personal merit."

Let's remember that Ms. Abedin is a staff member, not a principal. It's one thing to level charges at an elected member of Congress or the Administration.

It's a completely different matter to target a staff member – especially someone who John McCain says "represents the best about America."

How much money will Republicans in Congress waste to try and bring down Hillary Clinton? We've already seen that the so-called House Benghazi Committee has wasted 18 months and over $5 million.

How much taxpayer money is Senator Grassley's Judiciary Committee wasting on its anti-Hillary Clinton campaign?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We know how much how much money and staff are being devoted to investigating Secretary Clinton in the House. It's $5 million to date, or $8,000 each day.

How many millions are the American people paying for the Judiciary Committee to duplicate the House's political attacks?

I know the senior Senator from Iowa cares about the proper use of taxpayer resources. And with his reputation for being a good steward of federal dollars, Senator Grassley should be willing to tell us about the resources his committee is spending to investigate Secretary Clinton.

The American people deserve to know much money is being spent on these investigations, especially if 600 honorable Foreign Service officers are going to be used as political pawns in a crusade against Secretary Hillary Clinton.

I hope that Senator Grassley will drop his opposition to career diplomats and other important nominations, and we can give these good people the promotions they've earned.

We should pass these promotions lists tonight without further delay.

Americans have fought their way back from tough economic times but the deck is still stacked for those at the top. I'm running because everyday Americans and their families need a champion and I want to be that champion. When our families are strong, America's strong.

It's not enough that corporations are raking in record profits and that CEO pay is through the roof, your family needs to be able to get ahead too. You need to have a little more so you can worry a little less.

(Have some savings you know you can fall back on, put money aside for retirement, pay off your student loans, start a small business, be able to give your children choices for their future.)

Now, I know it's not going to be easy. We face some pretty powerful forces. But I've spent my whole life fighting for children, for families, standing up for America. And I think people know...I don't quit.

For me, it isn't enough for American families to just get by, you deserve to get ahead and stay ahead. It's your time.

John,

Attached is the proposed list of leadership for the policy working groups for your review. You can click on each name and it will take you straight to the person's bio on the internet.

Each policy group will be managed by a Coordinator (or co-coordinators) who will lead the operations of the group and serve as the primary liaison with the policy team. Additionally we will have 2-4 Senior Partners per group who are high level notable policy leaders in their field. The Senior Partners will join the monthly calls and work with the coordinators to provide overall strategic direction for the group.

We have held off on reaching out to most of the Domestic and Econ leaders until you review and provide feedback. Please let us know if there are particular groups that you would like to weigh in on specifically. We have started discussions with many of the Foreign Policy group leaders and have received positive responses.

Next Steps:

1. You review the list and flag any questions, concerns, or recommendations.
2. Policy will circulate the list to senior staff leadership for a quick review for any major political red flags (All the proposed Coordinators and Senior Partners have been vetted or are currently being vetted).
3. Policy will send a brief memo to Secretary Clinton outlining the working group process and attach the leadership list.
4. Start launching the groups as early as next week.

Thank you,
Ed

I'm fine with it.
I think, though, as soon as we do it we probably need to dial up what we feed them, since these other people are giving them lots of content and they'll just go back to them if we don't. Jen I defer if waiting a week helps us in that regard.
The other thing we'd need to be very careful about from a compliance perspective is that we are volunteering to help her make a final decision. We haven't been "hired" and she hasn't decided to run. It's very important we make that clear.

Standing up for Iowa values.

Dear John,

After it was made clear that the congressional Select Committee on Benghazi was nothing more than a political ploy meant to discredit Democrats, Steve King has doubled down this week on this egregious waste of tax payer dollars.*

"Using official congressional resources for campaign purposes is a violation of the rules of the house and federal law." The Benghazi Committee has proven to be little more than a political witch hunt and a long, drawn-out waste of congressional resources and tax payer dollars. We need a representative in congress who is willing to look to the future, not an obstructionist stuck in the past. And I believe that representative is me--I will work across the aisle to move our state and our country forward.

Please, take a minute to sign our petition, and let's send a strong message to Steve King and the Republicans in congress--We want to move forward and start talking about real issues!

Sorry. Just saw. Seems like prep is going fine. My guess is she won't mind doing the call, might be a bit of a relief from talking to us, but no big deal to postpone a week. Hoping to land joint endorsement first week in November so delay may push that back.

Great--moving John to BCC. Hi Steve--hope you've been well. John is in town next Thursday and Friday (June 4-5. We can either meet at John's Perkins Coie office at 700 13th St NW, or John could come to you.

Thoughts? If those dates don't work, we can look to the following week, though it's a bit uncertain now.

Thanks,

The EU must take a stand on Islam as well as the refugee situation

Massimo D'Alema, Foundation for European Progressive Studies, Tariq Ramadan, President of the European Muslim Network, published this opinion article on how to build a sustainable cohabitation space inside a Europe that is becoming a multi-ethnic, multi-faith, multicultural, multilingual society. This article is inspired by a debate organised at the Université Catholique de Louvain (Belgium) last December.

"Europe is in a paradoxical situation. The tragic challenges that shook Europe in 2015 should have encouraged it to pursue greater political unity and to initiate a debate on Islam. However, the fight against "Islamic terrorism" and the admission of refugees are having the effect of creating feelings of fear and insecurity, which push people in the opposite direction.

On the one hand, in Europe, xenophobia and racism fuel the idea that the European Union should shut itself in and become a fortress cut off from the rest of the world. On the other hand, there are the migration flows. They cannot be stopped, but must be controlled using the maximum foresight required to avoid serious social, cultural and religious consequences. That is the future of Europe".

FEPS' signature event, Call to Europe v (June, 2015), was a "starting point of a dialogue with our European Muslim fellow-citizens", as Massimo D'Alema, President of FEPS, said in his opening speech. Our aim is "to better understand how these European citizens and inhabitants live together with the other Europeans, how their principles and values coexist with the principles and values on which the European Union has been built and which underpin our own cohabitation".

"The idea of a clash between Islam and “the West” – a word in which everything is put together and confused – has misled our policies and our narratives. Islam holds a place in our Western societies. Islam belongs in Europe. It holds a place in Europe's history, in our culture, in our food and – what matters most – in Europe's present and future." said Federica Mogherini, High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy, Vice-President of the European Commission, during Call to Europe.

The future of the European Union is today more than ever to become a mutiethnic, multi religious and multilingual society. The goal of this dialogue is to promote a better quality of our living together on the base of a better mutual knowledge. In this context, FEPS is proposing 8 concrete proposals.

OBAMA BIDEN

John --

If you've seen any coverage of Paul Ryan's speech in Tampa, you know that the consensus among journalists and independent observers is that it was ... factually challenged.

He lied about Medicare. He lied about the Recovery Act. He lied about the deficit and debt. He even dishonestly attacked Barack Obama for the closing of a GM plant in his hometown of Janesville, Wisconsin -- a plant that closed in December 2008 under George W. Bush. He also failed to offer one constructive idea about what he would do to move the country forward.

Don't roll your eyes. We can't just groan and shrug and remark to our like-minded friends that this is ridiculous, because this is a significant moment in this campaign.

The fact that this speech, on this huge stage, is this blatantly false represents a huge bet by the Romney campaign -- they've decided that facts, truth and reality will not be a brake on their campaign message. And they just signaled to the extremist billionaires and corporate interests that support them that they should go ahead and spend their hundreds of millions of dollars attacking Barack Obama with whatever lies can work.

The only thing that can beat this back is you:

Subject: [big campaign] FW: Iraq sees hope of US troop withdrawal by 2010

Full article with exact al-Dabbagh quotes

Iraq sees hope of US troop withdrawal by 2010

By BRIAN MURPHY, Associated Press Writer 23 minutes ago

Iraq's government welcomed Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama on Monday with word that it apparently shares his hope that U.S. combat forces could leave by 2010.

The statement by Iraq's government spokesman, Ali al-Dabbagh, followed talks between Obama and Prime Minister Nouri Al-Maliki — who has struggled for days to clarify Iraq's position on a possible timetable for a U.S. troop pullout.

Al-Dabbagh said the government did not endorse a fixed date, but hoped American combat units could be out of Iraq sometime in 2010. That timeframe falls within the 16-month withdrawal plan proposed by Obama, who arrived in Iraq earlier in the day as part of a congressional fact-finding team.

"We are hoping that in 2010 that combat troops will withdraw from Iraq," al-Dabbagh told reporters, noting that any withdrawal plan was subject to change if the level of violence kicks up again.

Obama made no public statements following the talks with al-Maliki and President Jalal Talabani in Baghdad's heavily protected Green Zone. Obama also plans meetings with U.S. military commanders who will outline recent progress in the war he has opposed from the start.

This was the third stop on a foreign tour designed to gather information while burnishing the Democratic contender's foreign policy credentials. National security issues are the one issue area in which Obama trails Republican John McCain in the polls.

The Iraqi government comment on troop withdrawals could be embraced by the Obama campaign, but may irritate White House officials. The Bush administration has refused to set specific troop level targets and only last week offered to discuss a "general time horizon" for a U.S. combat troop exit.

The Iraqi stance also is another wrinkle in a confusing series of remarks and denials in recent days.

Al-Maliki was quoted last week by the German magazine Der Spiegel appearing to endorse Obama's 16-month timetable. The Iraqi leader's aides have since said his comments were misunderstood, and he is not taking sides in the U.S. election.

The U.S. military also took the unusual step of translating and distributing the Iraqi government reaction to the Der Spiegel article.

The meetings with Iraqi officials came after Obama began his first on-the-ground inspection of Iraq since launching his bid for the White House.

It marked the second major leg of a war zone tour that opened in Afghanistan. The contrasts in tone and message were distinct.

Obama sees the battle against the resurgent Taliban and al-Qaida in Afghanistan as America's most crucial fight and supports expanding troop strength there to counter a sharp rise in attacks.

But Obama had opposed the Iraq invasion and now worries that an open-ended U.S. combat mission here will sap military resources and focus — at a time when Iraq violence has dropped to its lowest level in four years.

The Illinois senator — traveling with Sens. Jack Reed, D-R.I., and Chuck Hagel, R-Neb. — arrived first in the southern city of Basra, the U.S. Embassy said.

Basra is the center for about 4,000 British troops involved mostly in training Iraqi forces. An Iraqi-led offensive begun in March reclaimed control of most of the city from Shiite militia believed linked to Iran.

His meetings in Baghdad were expected to include the top U.S. commander in Iraq, Gen. David Petraeus, and other military chiefs outlining the significant gains in recent months against both Shiite militia and Sunni insurgents including al-Qaida in Iraq.

The White House and military leaders — and many residents of Baghdad — trace the momentum back to last year's buildup of more than 30,000 troops in areas around Iraq's capital. McCain has tried to hammer Obama on his criticisms of that military surge.

In an interview Monday on ABC's "Good Morning America," McCain said he hoped Obama would now "have the opportunity to see the success of the surge."

"This is the same strategy that he voted against, railed against," McCain said. "He was wrong about the surge. It is succeeding and we are winning."

All five surge brigades have left Iraq, but there are still about 147,000 U.S. soldiers in Iraq, more than in early 2007.

Iraqi leaders also pressed Obama for more clarity on his long-term vision for relations with Washington. Such discussions have added importance since Iraq and U.S. negotiators appear stalled in efforts to reach a long-range pact to define future U.S. military presence and obligations.

American diplomats hoped to reach a final accord by the end of the month, but it now seems the goal is a stopgap "bridge" document that would maintain the status for U.S. forces once a U.N. mandate on their presence expires at the end of the year. Such as move would leave the hard bargaining to the next president.

Obama arrived following talks Sunday in Kuwait with the emir, Sheik Sabah Al Ahmed Al Sabah. Earlier he met with U.S. military commanders and troops in Afghanistan and held talks with President Hamid Karzai.
He is scheduled to go on to Jordan, Israel and European capitals.

Dear John, I left a message at your office about a week ago. Christopher and I have been thinking about you and Mary these last few weeks. Praying that Mary is recovering as quickly as possible. We are sorry we missed you all when Gabe graduated, but we took off that weekend for a family vacation down in San Diego. So hope to see you soon (perhaps at the Democracy Alliance meeting on 6/29)—be in touch and best, Maria

-- Report on new poll showing HRC losing or tying against three leading Republicans in Virginia, Iowa, and Colorado. Shows favorability ratings for HRC in these states being lower than they were in the spring. Says her rating are more unfavorable than favorable. Steven Dinan weighs in and say HRC is in the 30's in terms of favorability, which is Dinan says is similar to President George W. Bush's numbers towards the end of his tenure. He says this is the trajectory of her campaign where, just like in 2008, a lot of people don't like that she's considered the inevitable candidate. Dinan says the other issue is the closed off aspect of the campaign compared to Donald Trump who is saying a whole lot every day. Add the email issues, and it's not surprising. Host says the Republican candidates want the coverage and HRC loses ground on questions like honesty and trustworthiness. Shows HRC trailing in polling results in these three states against Jeb Bush, Scott Walker, and Marco Rubio.Says Bernie Sanders actually does better than HRC in some areas. Says these states are a good test because you have Hispanic and rural voters. Says HRC seems like she is trailing the conversation and she even scores low on leadership in some of these polls. America's Newsroom w/ Bill Hemmer-Martha MacCallum. 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Donald Trump,Commentary,America's Newsroom on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Report of new poll saying HRC has dropped among voters in Virginia, Iowa, and Colorado. Says her ratings on honesty and leadership have dropped as well. Guest says the more people see of HRC, the less they like her because she's not a natural politician like WJC. Says HRC is running on a third term for Obama. Says she is running on identity politics, and you don't necessarily win trying to divide Americans. Ashley Webster says new poll shows that people don't think HRC cares about their needs and concerns, which he says is interesting. Says the whole fuss over Trump is a good thing for HRC because otherwise there would be a lot more questions about her leadership abilities and trustworthiness. Varney agrees. Guest says HRC is running as if we didn't have all the types of social media we have today, but there are a lot more eyeballs on HRC now and you can't hide from the media and treat the press as an afterthought the way they used to. Says HRC hopes the Republicans will just beat each other up. Varney & Company . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Donald Trump,Commentary,Varney on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Commentary on Planned Parenthood controversy. Peter Doocy says Democrats have not commented on the video other than Bernie Sanders saying he felt that Cecile Richards' apology for the tone of the video was sufficient. Says HRC has been quiet on this issue. Chris Hayes joins the show and says part of the issue is that reporters can't get close to HRC to ask about this controversy, but even if they could, Hayes doesn't believe reporters would ask HRC these questions without the prompting of Republican candidates. America's Newroom w/ Bill Hemmer-Martha MacCallum. 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Peter Doocy on Planned Parenthood controversy.mp4

-- Jeff Zeleny reports on poll showing HRC with high unfavorability ratings in Colorado, Iowa, and Virginia. Zeleny asks why democrats and independents aren't attaching themselves to or excited by HRC's candidacy. Says that the Donald Trump stuff has been a respite but the reality is HRC needs to work on trying to be more. Says these polls are a fresh reminder that 2016 is going to be a very tight race. CNN Newsroom with Carol Costello . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Donald Trump,Commentary,Jeff Zeleny on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Report on new Quinnipiac poll showing HRC trailing Rubio, Bush, and Walker in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. Host mentions that Iowa is much more conservative than most of the rest of the nation. Ed O'Keefe says he is surprised by these numbers because they suggest a downward tilt for HRC that hadn't been there before across the country. Also says that this could be an anomaly and it's still more than a year before the general election. Says that this shows that there continues to be concern about HRC's record as Secretary of State and whether she was forthcoming about her emails. Shows Iowa poll which notes that 33% of Iowans believe that HRC is honest and trustworthy while 59% do not. O'Keefe reminds viewers that other candidates have similar numbers in both parties. Says HRC did not do well in Iowa in 2008 so she's been having problems there for a while. Says that is why she is focusing on grassroots organizing there so that someone like Bernie Sanders doesn't steal the win. Says this confirms that HRC still has a lot of work to do despite being the front runner. O'Keefe says the poll bump for people like Sanders is just the typical year before the big year reaction that people have. However, says that it does show that right now, a lot of people are concerned about how these things are shaking out. -- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll. Highlights polls in Colorado, Iowa, and Virginia showing HRC behind Rubio, Bush, and Walker. Also notes that Donald Trump is polling lower according to these polls. -- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll which shows HRC polling poorly in Iowa, Colorado, and Virginia. Highlights the high unfavorability ratings in those three states. Says if you are a Republican looking at these polls, you would think that the battle field at the moment is good for you. Jackie Kucinich says that these polls are saying voters don't think HRC cares about them and their issues and that's a huge problem for her campaign right now. Host says trust and leadership are the two issues where HRC suffers right now. Juana Summers says HRC is having to deal with the left as well so she needs to harness this so that her unfavorability doesn't spread to other states as well. New Day . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Discussion of Quinnipiac poll on New Day.mp4

-- Coverage of new Quinnipiac poll which shows that only in Virginia are HRC's favorability ratings above those of Trump. Joe Scarborough says that these polls, and says Jeb Bush's probably aren't much better, show why someone like Donald Trump is actually getting support for being against politicians. Scarborough says if HRC is supposed to be the nominee, what does the Democratic Party do about numbers like these? Chuck Todd weighs in saying that if it wasn't for Trump, the biggest story of the summer would be HRC failing to solidify herself with the Democrats and what we're seeing here is that in both parties, the populist base is flexing its muscles and people like Trump and Sanders are tapping into that. Says whenever HRC is out front as the face of the Democratic Party, her numbers go down. Says it could be because she doesn't wear well. When she takes the supporting or victim role as first lady or secretary of state, her numbers go up. Mike Barnicle weighs in saying there is an estrangement from the process that extends beyond party lines and HRC's campaign is a casualty of this. Agrees that HRC just simply doesn't wear well. Morning Joe . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Donald Trump,Commentary,Chuck Todd on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Mel Martinez comments on Donald Trump saying that Trump needs to commit to support the Republican nominee if he is not the nominee. Says the best chance for HRC not to win the election is for Trump to commit to supporting the Republican nominee regardless, since his base most certainly does not want HRC to win. Martinez says he views Jeb Bush as the best chance for HRC to win. Chris Cumo points to the poll that shows HRC winning over Jeb Bush by an even larger margin when Donald Trump enters the race as an independent. Martinez says these polls will eventually shift because people are going to start looking at the serious issues. New Day. 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Donald Trump,Commentary,Mel Martinez comments on Donald Trump.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll with Mark Murray joining the show to discuss the results. Murray says this shows vulnerabilities in key states but says this is still very early and HRC ends up leading in most national polls against all Republicans. Says national polls generally reflect what is happening in the states and we need to wait until the nominees are in place before we start zeroing in on these states. News Nation . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Donald Trump,Commentary,Mark Murray comments on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC trailing in Virginia, Colorado, and Iowa. Says HRC is facing not only heavy pressure from the left, but now is also trailing to Republicans in the three key states. Don Peebles says HRC has the nomination locked up, but she's letting herself be pulled to the left. Says she's strong and doesn't need to turn to the left, and that is going to hurt her in the general. Peebles says he likes Jeb Bush for this reason, and host notes that Peebles is an Obama donor. Says he likes Obama and not HRC because he likes people paying attention to income inequality, but thinks Obama right now and HRC are too far to the left. Host says there are reports that HRC is telling big banks right now not to worry and that she just has to cater to the left at the moment to get the nomination. Peebles says if that were true, that's unfortunate. Says that's why people like Trump, because you know he's saying exactly what he means and is accountable to himself alone. Cavuto: Coast to Coast . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Jeb Bush,Commentary,Don Peebles on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Commentary on HRC and the latest Quinnipiac polls. Mark Murray comments saying it's very early right now and the problem that HRC has as the front runner is that any time there are polls that come out that show her not doing all that well, they get a lot more attention than the ones that always have her in the lead. Says there is a national poll that shows her leading Jeb Bush, but that doesn't get as much coverage. Murray says the battleground states generally match up very well with the national polls, and this time it doesn't and we're not sure which the outlier is. Says the bigger story is that we're still 15 months away from the election. Karen Tumulty weighs in and says HRC has a little tension with her own base right now and she's working through that by talking about things like income inequality. Says as a general proposition, the longer the Trump thing goes on, the better for HRC. Andrea Mitchell Reports . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Mark Murray and Karen Tumulty on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Commentary on Quinnipiac poll showing HRC losing to top 3 GOP candidates in Iowa, Colorado and Virginia. Says Monica Crawley predicts that Joe Biden will enter this race and Obama will back Biden and turn the White House over to him. Jamie Weinstein says he sees an opening for Biden to get into this race, especially after seeing these numbers. Kucinich weighs in saying there really isn't any infrastructure other than Draft Biden camp for Biden to run. Says we have never seen Obama's infrastructure work for anyone except him. Doesn't think the Democratic field is going to get any wider because the bench isn't very deep because the party hasn't really fostered anyone to be the next big thing. Weinstein says some of the scandals the media has focused on have hurt HRC's trustworthiness and honesty ratings. Kucinich agrees but points out that WJC won even when people didn't trust him. Happening Now . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Joe Biden,Commentary,Commentary of Opening for Joe Biden in 2016 Race.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC losing to Marco Rubio, Jeb Bush, and Scott Walker in Iowa, Colorado, and Virginia. David Chalian points out that this is snapshot in time and looking at an election so far down the road is hard to do, but he does think it gives a certain amount of information. Says there are warning signs for HRC about how voters in these states are perceiving her. A majority of voters in these states feel that HRC is not trustworthy or honest and have unfavorable opinions of her. Says HRC's campaign is not worried about this because they love to look at their own data and question the public polls, but says he does think that this is something she needs to take note of. Says at this point, things like honesty and trustworthiness are pretty tied to likeability. Says the Clinton campaign is counting on the fact that when they engage in the policy debate that will make them look trustworthy to voters. Brooke Baldwin points out that HRC just started talking about her economic agenda and that's something that is going to take a little while to sink in with voters. Chalian says right now, Walker and Rubio are doing well against HRC as of right now but wouldn't read too much into the polls right now. Says HRC's campaign is probably worried about all three of these candidates as a possible Republican nominee right now. Wolf . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,David Chalian on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac polls showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado.Host points out that Bernie Sanders did as well or better against these same three candidates in the same three states and President Obama won all three in both of his elections. Live with Thomas Roberts. 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton;Bernie Sanders,Commentary,Live with Thomas Roberts discusses Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. Shira Center says it's a little concerning because regardless of what you are running for, you always want to be polling in the lead, but says it isn't that surprising given the nature of the race. Says when you have so many Republicans running, voters haven't had a chance to get to know all of their records in the same way they've gotten to know HRC's over the last several decades. Host points out that Bernie Sanders does about as well as HRC against Republicans. Center says this problem is partial hers as opposed to one of party branding because everyone has an opinion on HRC already, so you will have a portion of the population who will just never vote for HRC. Live With Thomas Roberts . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Shira Center on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. Says the polls show that most voters do not trust HRC. Notes that Virginia is the closest of the polls, but is still notable because voters voted longtime Clinton family friend Terry McAuliffe as governor. Host adds the disclaimer that it's still very early.Shepard Smith Reporting . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Shepard Smith on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado.Notes that Virginia has been trending blue in recent years. Jonathan Allen says you're hearing a lot of Hillary-bashing in the press right now, but says he always likes to wait for the second and third polls to come out to see if there's a trend. The Cycle. 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Jonathan Allen on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. John Heilemann joins and says it's not quite as bad of a poll as it looks. Says they are looking into the polls some more and the sample looks a little bit more like a midterm electorate than a general election electorate which means it is a little less Hispanic and a little less Democratic. Says it may be that the poll isn't quite realistic which might account for the surprising Republican leads. Bloomberg Markets . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,John Heilemann on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado.Blake Burkman reports that Obama flipped those three states in both of his elections, but HRC could fail to keep them blue according to this poll. Reports that Bernie Sanders did just as well as and sometimes better than HRC in the poll. Says HRC's approval rating is underwater in all three states. After the Bell . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Blake Burkman on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. Says negative opinions of HRC are nearly as high as Donald Trump in Iowa. Michael Tomasky, Joan Walsh, and Michael Steele weigh in on the polling results. Tomasky says it's just one poll and is a little different than other polls which has showed HRC leading all of these guys for a year, but if this is symbolic of what is to come, says this is bad news for HRC. Says in 1999 and 2000 during her Senate runs, HRC also had a deficit and she overcame it. Says she has to do something like that here, but she might have an issue because she's already so well known. Walsh said the honesty and trust numbers have come up before, and it's concerning that people don't thinks she cares about them. Says the gulf is so wide that something is going on, says it will be a 50/50 election if she is a nominee. Steele says the narrative that's being discussed is not about the Hillary narrative, but rather Trump, which is bad for the Republican field. NOW With Alex Wagner . 2015 07 22,Hillary ClintonCommentary,Steele-Tomasky-Walsh on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Criticism of HRC's Snapchat appearance. Shows the "Just Chillin" video. Panel weighs in to make fun of the video saying that it seemed unnatural and forced. After the Bell . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,After the Bell Panel Criticizes HRC's Snapchat appearance.mp4

-- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. Adds that voters in these states do not trust HRC. Says Bernie Sanders' trustworthiness numbers look much better than HRC's. Says the poll shows a huge opportunity for Sanders to overtake HRC. Says Sanders does a little better than HRC against republicans. Says HRC has a lot to work on. -- Coverage of Quinnipiac poll showing HRC behind the three leading Republican candidates in Iowa, Virginia, and Colorado. Shows clips of cable news guests talking about how bad this poll shows that things are for HRC. Mark Halperin weighs in and says after looking at the numbers more, the makeup of the sample in this poll is flawed in that it looks more like a midterm election than a general, but shows that she is not invincible and her numbers have taken a hit. Republicans need to feel like they have a candidate who can beat HRC. Host says the bigger concern is that HRC is falling a lot in terms of her favorability. Halperin says HRC is vulnerable and if the Republicans are going to win, they need to feel like they are going to be able to beat her. Host says it's going to be hard for Republicans to reclaim all of the blue states claimed by Obama. With All Due Respect . 2015 07 22,Hillary Clinton,Commentary,Mark Halperin on Quinnipiac poll.mp4

-- Report from Univision on Donald Trump in the polls. Says that Trump "has not stopped generating news" among GOP candidates by attacking Mexican immigrants and questioning McCain's heroism. Anchor says that "the result is surprising" because "he has risen in polls but has also been confronted by politicians in his own party." Reporter says that he's risen in polls as he has insulted his opponents. Trump leads the field of 16 candidates with 24% support in an ABC News/WaPo poll from Republican voters and independents that lean Republican, trailed by over 10 points by Scott Walker and Jeb Bush. Republican political analyst says that he doesn't think that means that they'll actually vote for Trump but rather that "it's a manifestation of unrest/anger." He also believes that Trump's recent comments about McCain's heroism will lead polls to change. Shows clip of Lindsey Graham saying that Trump is a jackass and that "he's dragging his name and doesn't help the process, he shouldn't be Commander in Chief." Trump responded by calling him a lightweight and idiot. Shows clip of Trump saying that Graham is an idiot and refusing to apologize to McCain, then shows a clip of McCain saying he doesn't want an apology from Trump. McCain says, "I don't want to reopen the wounds from the war, I want to honor our veterans." Report then says that the Des Moines Register in Iowa said that Trump should drop out of the race and is not alone in calling for that. Trump also said that Rick Perry put on glasses to seem smarter and criticized President Obama for not ordering earlier that flags on federal buildings fly at half-staff after the Chattanooga killings. Congress has done that, along with Trump at his properties. Following report then mentions that Kasich entered the presidential race. -- Report from Univision on crowded Republican field for the primaries and Trump's place in polls. Report begins saying that John Kasich entered the race and can boast that he's never lost an election and has 4 decades of political experience. This is Kasich's second time running for President, since he had to drop of out of the race in 1999 for financial reasons. Report then says that Donald Trump is also "gaining ground in Republican preferences for the election." Trump is first in in a WaPo/ABC poll with 24% support, over 10 points ahead of Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker, who has 13%, and Jeb Bush who has 12%. Trump has been criticized for attacking Mexican immigrants in his speeches. Save the date: Bet Tzedek honors Eric Holder - banksters and fraudsters united!

December 6 - Bet Tzedek - "The Los Angeles House of Justice" - an affiliate of the Greater Los Angeles Jewish Federation, will honor Eric Holder - former US Attorney General in its annual dinner party.
Under former Presidents Sandor Samuels (then Countrywide Chief Legal Officer and later Bank of America Associate Chief Legal Counsel) and David Pasternak (today President of the California Bar Association) Bet Tzedek effectively was the headquarters of the Los Angeles organized crime gang of banksters, lawyers and judges.
Eric Holder is notorious for his brainchild, "Too big to fail, too big to jail" - permitting criminality of the banks with no law enforcement.

Bet Tzedek honors Eric Holder! Cheers!

Nevada Sees Triple the Projected LED Sales Due to Instant Discount

By Lisa Cohn on Sep 14, 2015 07:48 am

Participation in Nevada's energy efficiency program led to three times the projected LED sales due in large part to an "instant discount" program. "Nevada initiated the LED program in 2014 and had three times the level of participation they had planned the first year," said Howard Geller, executive director of SWEEP.

Subject: Help Stop Subsidies to Big Oil Companies!

Clean Water Action logo with wave background

Let's Not Dive Off the Cliff - Take Action Today!

Dear Mary,

Congress and the President are currently debating how to handle the “fiscal cliff” – the combined impact of drastic, across-the-board spending cuts known as “sequestration” and the expiration of the Bush tax cuts. If they can’t agree on a plan, tax rates will go up and huge reductions will be made to vital environmental, health, and other programs. These are the programs that help keep our drinking water clean and our air healthy. In addition, tax credits that boost clean energy will also expire without action. Help us make sure environmental programs aren’t pushed off the cliff – contact your Representative and Senators today!

Congress needs to take a balanced approach to address the “fiscal cliff”. The plan must include new revenue, revitalize the economy, and protect and improve our environment.

We can do this by :

- Avoiding Further Cuts to Environmental Programs: These programs are only 1.25% of the budget, but provide enormous benefits such as cleaner air and water, and healthier communities.
- Eliminating Tax Giveaways to Big Oil and other polluting industries: Ending century-old giveaways to big oil companies would save billions, reduce harmful pollution, and reduce healthcare costs.
- Investing in Clean Energy to Revitalize the Economy: Continued investment in renewable energy such as wind and solar will create jobs, strengthen and diversify our economy, and reduce harmful air pollution.

Congress has an opportunity to define a new course for our nation’s economy, one that recognizes that a healthy environment and healthy economy go hand in hand. This means avoiding further spending cuts to environmental programs, ending tax breaks for dirty fuels and investing in clean energy to ensure a stronger economy and healthier future for all Americans.

Send a message to Representative and Senators today!

apparent that they had lost, the Bernie Sanders campaign began to peddle frivolous claims that have been disproven in an effort to poison an otherwise historic night for Hillary Clinton, our supporters, and volunteers.

Remember coin flip-gate where people claimed Hillary won all the coin tosses? Turns out that wasn't true . In fact, according to the official count, Sen. Sanders won more coin tosses than Hillary Clinton.

Or how about the "90 precincts" with no chairs? Also untrue. Certainly there were precincts that took a while to report but once they all did, it was clear Hillary had won.

Now the Sanders campaign is disputing the reported results that were sent in by everyday Iowans - volunteers, no less! - to the Democratic Party. All three campaigns have checked the results of certain precincts against their own data reported to them from volunteers. That's normal. For the Sanders campaign's challenges, there are 7 total precincts they are questioning (out of a whopping total 1,681 precincts!) and the Iowa Democratic Party is checking the results on a few more. And they will follow the same standard procedure for these questions as they did for precincts we asked them to look at - they'll look at the numbers reported that night, check the math and figure out if there are any discrepancies or misallocation of delegates.

Here's the kicker. Even if the Sanders campaign were to win all of their challenges - the marginal bump they receive in support would not be enough to overcome Hillary Clinton's win margin. Those are just the facts.

Here's the math.

Total Precincts in Contest: 11 (7 from Sanders and 4 from the Iowa Democratic Party)
Total State Delegates being Contested: 1.7947 (not enough to change outcome)

If every contest were to go in the favor of Sanders:
HRC = -.775
Sanders = +.758
MOM = +.0166

It may be inconvenient for the Sanders campaign that Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus, but it's the truth. Eight years ago Hillary came in third here in Iowa and when she did, she congratulated the winner. We suggest Senator Sanders do the same.

I'd hold on the Romney spots, except the ones piggybacking on McCain. Certainly wouldn't spend 75k at this point to do the factory spot. I think McShame is a mistake--right up there with General Betray us.

I'm thinking for the expensive Romney and McCain spots we wait until today's scripts in good shape.

I'm trying to get more McCain and Romney "economy" scripts. Might not be doable for next week.

NextGen Climate¹s Friday Recap

This week, the Obama administration continued to forge ahead toward our country¹s clean energy future‹while Republicans in Congress remained stuck in the past.

Yesterday the Obama administration announced that the federal government would cut its greenhouse gas emissions by 40 percent and increase the share of electricity it gets from renewables by 30 percent.

It wasn¹t just environmentalists who cheered the President¹s new executive order. The cuts will save taxpayers $18 billion (attention fiscal conservatives!) over the next decade and major companies have announced similar commitments‹IBM voluntarily agreed to cut its energy consumption 35% by 2020 and GE announced it will reduce its emissions by 20%. These steps not only put the United States on a clear path to a prosperous clean energy future‹they also mean real savings for business and American taxpayers.

While the White House and business leaders are moving our country forward, Republicans in Congress remain as committed as ever to their troglodyte agenda. On Wednesday, House Republicans proposed cutting the Department of Defense and CIA¹s climate research funding‹despite the fact that both these agencies have identified climate change as one of the most significant national security threats.

Fortunately, this blatant denial‹and defunding‹of basic science doesn¹t fly the way it used to. On Wednesday, FEMA announced it won¹t give money to states that fail to plan for the impacts of climate change‹putting climate deniers like Florida Governor Rick Scott in a serious bind . Late night TV also got in on the fun, mocking Senator Ted Cruz for denying climate change.

With a large majority of Americans supporting action on climate, eventually, something's got to give. As President Obama told VICE this week, "I guarantee you that the Republican Party will have to change its approach to climate change because voters will insist upon it."

Associated Press: Obama orders 40 percent cut in government's greenhouse gases

President Barack Obama will order the federal government on Thursday to cut its emissions of greenhouse gases by 40 percent, as the U.S. seeks to spur other nations to get serious about climate change.

National Journal: Republicans Push Climate Change Cuts at CIA, Defense Department

House Republicans want to eliminate climate research.

Salon: FEMA won't give money to states that don't plan for climate change

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) just updated its guidelines for state disaster preparedness plans, and under the new policy, plans will only be approved ‹ and federal funds appropriated ‹ if they address the threats of climate change.

News Alert

Obama to vastly expand Pacific Ocean sanctuaries

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

President Obama will announce his intent Tuesday to make a broad swath of the central Pacific Ocean off-limits to fishing, energy exploration and other activities, according to senior White House officials.

The proposal, slated to go into effect later this year after a comment period, could create the world's largest marine sanctuary and double the area of ocean globally that is fully protected.

Bill's relationship with both the Secretary and President Clinton is a complicated one as you likely know and understand. I think there's a natural opportunity to get things in better order for all the parties (our friends) concerned. And I think given Bill's profile and positive statements about Hillary and her campaign (and his appropriate criticism of some of the Republican candidates, namely Rubio), this is a timely and important matter. I think it has the potential to be a relatively easy fix but will take some purposeful effort on our parts to accomplish that.

Subject: The public option

Dear John,

We cannot fix our economy or help working families unless we address the health care crisis and lower costs for everyone. But many Republicans and the special interests they serve have done nothing but stand in the way. They refuse to play a meaningful role in the debate to work towards consensus. The American people deserve better.

It's high time we work with President Obama to fix our broken system. It's within our power to do so, but only if we stand up to the insurance companies and their mouthpieces and make our voices heard.

Click here and sign my petition in support of a health care reconciliation vote. Tell the Republicans we won't let them stand in the way of the public option that millions of Americans need.

We can no longer wait for the naysayers to come to the table. Our health care crisis demands action, and the best avenue left is to pass the public option through the Senate reconciliation process.

President Obama and Congress have been debating health care reform for more than a year and in that time our opponents have used every diversion and misrepresentation they could invent to block real health care reform. Since they refuse to be part of the solution, we must move forward without them.

Click here to sign my petition showing your support for a reconciliation vote and a public option that can compete with private health insurance and drive down health care costs for everyone.

It's time we stopped protecting the bottom line for a few insurance companies at the expense of the financial security of millions of American families. By passing the public option, we can inject real competition into the market, increasing efficiency and lowering costs for seniors, families and small businesses while saving our government upwards of $25 billion.

Ignoring our health care crisis is simply not an option. If we don't act now, costs will continue to rise, and more American families will be just one illness away from financial ruin.

Join me in urging Congress to enact real reform and create a public option that can compete with private insurance companies.

As always, I thank you for your support. Together, we can pass the public option and deliver the reform we have all worked so hard for.

Sincerely,

Kirsten Gillibrand

s Nobody Should Take Aaron Klein's New Book Seriously

Research 1 hour and 35 minutes ago ››› ERIC HANANOKI

WND reporter Aaron Klein is releasing The REAL Benghazi Story: What the White House and Hillary Don't Want You to Know, which claims to "expose" the "truth" about the 2012 attack on U.S. facilities in Libya. Klein is utterly devoid of credibility -- he's a conspiracy theorist who claims President Obama has an "eligibility problem," says Obama may be a Muslim who "might be with" Al-Qaeda given his "Islamic background," and previously authored books about Obama being a "Manchurian President" deserving of impeachment.

WND Books To Publish The REAL Benghazi Story

Klein Claims To Have Found "The Truth" About Benghazi. WND will publish The REAL Benghazi Story: What the White House and Hillary Don't Want You to Know on September 9. According to WND, Klein "finally exposes some of the most significant issues related to the murderous September 11, 2012, attack." [WND, accessed 9/2/14]

Reported Central Contentions Of The Book Are Already Debunked. Klein's book reportedly argues that former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton "was unwilling to provide additional security to the diplomatic outpost and even played a role in sending [U.S. Ambassador Chris] Stevens to his 'doomed mission.'" But those claims have been debunked, respectively, by diplomatic reporters and The State Department's Accountability Review Board. [Media Matters, 9/2/14]

1. Klein Works For Conspiracy Website WND

Klein "Is WND's Senior Staff Reporter And Jerusalem Bureau Chief." [WND, accessed 9/2/14]

WND Is Dedicated To "Fear-Mongering And Outright Fabrications." The Southern Poverty Law Center notes that WND's "pages are devoted to manipulative fear-mongering and outright fabrications designed to further the paranoid, gay-hating, conspiratorial and apocalyptic visions of [founder Joseph] Farah and his hand-picked contributors from the fringes ... Among its enduring storylines is the 'birther' theory advanced by columnist Jerome Corsi, who asserts that President Obama is ineligible to serve because he was not born in America." [Southern Poverty Law Center, accessed 9/2/14]

WND Is The Driving Force For Conspiracies About President Obama's Birth Certificate. The Anti-Defamation League has noted that WND "has spearheaded efforts to convince the public that Obama does not have a legitimate birth certificate." In addition to publishing countless articles, including some written by Klein, casting doubt on the validity of President Obama's birth certificate, WND sells bumper stickers, signs, and t-shirts asking "Where's the birth certificate?" It also funded a campaign for birther billboards and a plane banner. [ADL, accessed 9/3/14 ; WND, accessed 9/2/14 ; WND, accessed 9/2/14]

WND Publishes Claims About Obama "Homosexual Acts," Hillary Clinton's "Lesbian Affair," And "The Second Coming." Daily Beast editor-in-chief John Avlon writes in his book Wingnuts: Extremism in the Age of Obama of WND:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

> The site repeatedly published a thoroughly discredited drifter's claim that "he took cocaine in 1999 with the then Illinois legislator [Obama] and participated in homosexual acts" with him and regurgitated bilge about Hillary Clinton's "well-known bisexuality and her lesbian affair with her beautiful assistant."
> All in all, it offers a relentlessly grim prognosis for America short of the Second Coming (predicted for 2015), full of plans for Obama to bring back "inquisitions" and "destroy capitalism." No wonder its primary advertiser appears to be a marketer of "survival seeds" for your very own "crisis garden" and a "crisis cooker" to "prepare hot meals when the power is off." They are profiting off the paranoia they intentionally inflame in their readers.
> But the real growth industry for WorldNetDaily in 2009 was the enthusiastic advocacy of Birther claims that Obama was not born in the United States and is therefore ineligible to be president. Farah rented twenty roadside billboards that read, "Where's the Birth Certificate?" at a cost of $300,000 and collected online donations to help fund the effort. A WND-produced DVD, A Question of Eligibility, documents the claims of Birther proponents, including Alan Keyes and Orly Taitz, but darkly states that credits for the movie are being withheld by the filmmakers because "they fear reprisals from their government." [Salon, 9/2/14]

2. Klein Claims "Obama May Not Be Eligible To Serve As President"

Klein Is A Birther Who Doubts Obama Is A "Natural Born Citizen." Klein has suggested President Obama is not a "natural born citizen" because his father wasn't a U.S. citizen. Klein wrote in his book Manchurian President that there is "no convincing evidence that Obama was born in Kenya, nor that his birthplace was any place other than Hawaii, his declared state of birth." However, Klein argued that because Obama's father was not a U.S. citizen, there should be a "congressional debate about whether Obama is eligible under the United States Constitution to serve as president" and asserted that "Obama may not be eligible to serve as president." He adds that "a layman's reading of readily available legal resources ... clearly indicates a series of legitimate questions about Barack Obama's eligibility for the presidency, given that Obama's father was not an American citizen." [Media Matters, 5/7/10 ; Media Matters, 5/12/11]

Klein: "Obama's Very Presidency Could Itself Be Unconstitutional." Klein wrote a WND article with the headline, "IMPEACH OBAMA? PRESIDENCY LIKELY ILLEGAL. Central point missing from national conversation" arguing that "the nation failed to have a meaningful debate concerning the serious constitutional issue of electing someone whose father was not a U.S. citizen ... Obama's very presidency could itself be unconstitutional. And the matter has nothing to do with where the president was born." [WND, 7/18/14]

Klein: Obama Has An "Eligibility Problem." Klein repeatedly said on his WABC radio program that Obama has an "eligibility problem" because of his father not being a U.S. citizen. [WABC, Aaron Klein Investigative Radio, 9/4/11]

Obama Natural Born Citizen Argument Is Nonsense. Legal experts have rejected the claim that Obama isn't eligible to be president because his father wasn't a U.S. citizen. Additionally, a 2009 report from the Congressional Research Service on the definition of "natural-born citizen" concluded that the "weight of scholarly legal and historical opinion appears to support the notion that 'natural born Citizen' means one who is entitled under the Constitution or laws of the United States to U.S. citizenship 'at birth' or 'by birth,' including any child born 'in' the United States (other than to foreign diplomats serving their country)." [Media Matters, 5/7/10]

Klein Says "Modifications" On Obama's Birth Certificate "Raises Questions." After President Obama released his long form birth certificate in 2011, Klein repeatedly raised questions about the document's authenticity. While interviewing fellow WND writer Jerome Corsi on his WABC radio show, Klein said he hired "independent forensics experts" who "independently verified that there were modifications made ... that already raises questions. I mean, why would there be any modifications?" He complained that the media would have a field day if President Bush had a "similar situation" where he released a document that "may or may not have been a fraudulent birth certificate." [WABC, Aaron Klein Investigative Radio, 9/4/11]

3. Klein Said "I Don't Know If Obama's Muslim Or Not"

Klein: Unclear If Obama's Muslim, But He Attended A Church That "Is Not Christianity." In a speech posted online by Liberty News Network in November 2012, Aaron Klein said he doesn't know if Obama's a Muslim and that the church Obama attended in Chicago "is not" Christian but is "closer to Nation of Islam":

> KLEIN: A lot of people ask me, "Is Obama a secret Muslim?" I don't know. Although I do know he went to a black liberation theology church and black liberation theology is not Christianity. It's closer to Nation of Islam. I don't know if Obama's Muslim or not. He did certainly spend a lot of time in Indonesia as a child but we can't hold that against him. He was a kid. But what I do know is he's empowering radical Islam around the world. [Liberty News Network, 11/6/12]

Obama Is A Christian Who Attended A Christian Church. As PolitiFact noted, "all evidence points to the fact that Obama is a Christian." Obama's church in Chicago, Trinity United Church of Christ, is a Christian church. [PolitiFact, 8/26/10 ; Media Matters, 3/1/07]

4. Klein Said Obama "Might Be With" Al-Qaeda Given His "Islamic Background"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Klein: Obama "Might Be" In League With Al-Qaeda. Conspiracist radio host Alex Jones told Klein that the Obama administration is planning "to turn the whole Middle East and North Africa over to [Al-Qaeda] ... maybe there's something to the fact that Obama really, really is actually not even using these people, but actually might be with them." Klein replied that he Obama "might be with them" given his "Islamic background" and Chicago church:

> KLEIN: He might be with them. You can look at his larger, let's say, Islamic background, growing up in Indonesia, although, you know, it's hard to hold against him where he was brought against his will as a kid. But you could also look, of course, at his church of 20-something years which was not ordinary Christianity. It was black liberation theology, an ally basically with Islamist ideology, with the Nation of Islam. [Genesis Communication Network, The Alex Jones Show, 10/8/13]

5. "Ridiculous Crap": Klein Wrote Book Attacking Obama As "The Manchurian President"

Klein's Manchurian President Book Is Filled With Falsehoods And Conspiracy Theories. In 2010, Klein released The Manchurian President: Barack Obama's Ties to Communists, Socialists and Other Anti-American Extremists. Media Matters noted that Klein's book contained numerous false claims, discredited conspiracy theories, birther arguments, deceptive editing, and guilt by association to claim Obama was tied to "an Anti-American fringe nexus." Klein's smears included claiming "Weather Underground terrorist" Bill Ayers "may have ghostwritten most of" Obama's 1995 autobiography Dreams From My Father"; promoting the discredited claim that Kenyan politician Raila Odinga is Obama's cousin; claiming Obama may not be a "natural born citizen" because of his father; and pushing discredited attacks against White House officials, among others. [Media Matters, 5/7/10]

Reporters Called Klein's Book "Ridiculous Crap" And "Sensational Rubbish." WND wrote that Klein's publicist Maria Sliwa "sent a press release to key media contacts announcing the forthcoming book" and received numerous negative responses from reporters. From WND:

> Sliwa, however, said she was stunned by what she described as "unprecedented" e-mail replies she received regarding the "The Manchurian President" announcement.
> "Ridiculous crap," retorted John Oswald, news editor for the New York Daily News.
> "Never, ever contact me again," wrote Time Magazine senior writer Jeffrey Kluger.
> Newsweek deputy editor Rana Foroohar quipped," This is sensational rubbish that is of no interest to any legitimate publication."
> "Absolute crap," replied Evelyn Leopold, a Huffington Post contributor who served for 17 years as U.N. bureau chief for Reuters until recently.
> Nancy Gibbs, editor-at-large for Newsweek, fired, "Remove me from your list."
> David Knowles, AOL's political writer, responded, "seriously, get a life."
> Ben Wyskida, publicity director for The Nation, claimed Klein's book is "so offensive" and "so far afield."
> The reporters rejected the thoroughly documented book before receiving review copies of the title.
> Sliwa noted that when reporters are not interested in her releases, they normally do not reply. She said in her 10 years of working in public relations, she never has received the kind of response from reporters provoked by publicizing "The Manchurian President." [WND, 5/6/10]

6. Klein Wrote Impeachable Offenses: The Case For Removing Barack Obama From Office

Klein Cites Benghazi As A Reason To Impeach Obama. In 2013, Klein published Impeachable Offenses: The Case for Removing Barack Obama from Office. BuzzFeed wrote of the book:

> Impeachable Offenses: The Case for Removing Barack Obama from Office cites everything from the attack on the American consulate and CIA outpost in Benghazi -- which it compares to the Iran Contra scandal in the Reagan years -- to the way Obamacare was passed, which the authors say constitutes "taxation without representation." The book, by WABC radio host Aaron Klein and Brenda Elliott, an anti-Obama blogger, also includes American military action in Libya and the Transportation Security Administration's passenger screenings as impeachable offenses. [BuzzFeed, 8/20/13]

Klein: Obama Should Be Impeached To Prevent An Authoritarian State. Klein agreed with radio host Alex Jones' statement that Obama must be impeached to prevent an "authoritarian state."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

> JONES: If Obama gets away with this and then fades off, they've set the precedent that basically does turn America into an authoritarian state. We've got to impeach Obama. We can't just let him become a lame duck and sign a bunch of pardons.
> KLEIN: Yeah, that's just it. This is not about Democrat, it's not about Republican. This is not about who has more seats in Congress or in the Senate, this is about just that. If he gets away with it, then -- somebody else -- then the precedent is there. Then the red line has been crossed. And somebody else who comes next, or in five years, twenty years, whatever it is, can do just this and much more. He already got away with it. It seems that almost nothing is going to happen, that's why it's very important to send a message with this book, and with the impeachment campaign. [Genesis Communication Network, The Alex Jones Show, 10/8/13]

7. Klein Wrote An Article Wondering If Obama Is Satan Because A Fly Landed On Him

Klein Article Headline: "IS OBAMA BIBLICAL 'LORD OF THE FLIES'?" In January 2013, after a fly landed on President Obama during a press conference, Klein wrote that "News reports have recounted Obama's history of attracting flies during recorded interviews and speeches. Already, religious and other websites are using the headlines to point out that a biblical reference for Satan, the Semitic deity Beelzebub, literally translates from Hebrew into 'Lord of the Flies.'" Klein added, "Those reaching to connect Obama's fly troubles with the darkest biblical references won't have much difficulty." [WND, 1/25/13 , via Right Wing Watch]

8. Klein Promoted Conspiracy Theory That Bill Ayers Wrote Obama's Book

Klein: "Did Ayers Ghostwrite Obama's ... Memoir?" Klein's Manchurian President book contains a section titled, "Did Ayers ghostwrite Obama's 'best-written' memoir?" Klein writes that "Weather Underground terrorist" Bill Ayers "may have ghostwritten most of" Obama's 1995 autobiography Dreams From My Father. The conspiracy theory that Ayers wrote Obama's autobiography is a favorite of conservatives. [Media Matters, 5/7/10 ; Gawker, 3/28/11]

9. Klein Promotes The Muslim Brotherhood-Obama Administration Smear

Klein: Huma Abedin Has "Ties To The Muslim Brotherhood And Other Islamic Supremacists." Klein is one of the main promoters of the conspiracy theory that former State Department deputy chief of staff Huma Abedin is tied to the Muslim Brotherhood. The conspiracy theory has been promoted by the fringes of conservative media. [WND, 7/25/13 ; Media Matters, 7/23/12]

Citing Abedin, Klein Warns Of A "Muslim Brotherhood Infiltration Here In The United States." During a 2012 speech, Klein said that there's a "Muslim Brotherhood infiltration here in the United States. You may have heard of Huma Abedin, Hillary Clinton's chief of staff, who is heavily tied." [Liberty News Network, 11/6/12]

Abedin-Muslim Brotherhood Allegation Is Bogus And Has Been Condemned By Republican Leaders. The allegation that Abedin is connected to the Muslim Brotherhood has been condemned by both Democrats and Republican leaders like Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) and Speaker John Boehner (R-OH). The Atlantic investigated the allegations and concluded that "from person to person, you kind of have to do a somersault to get from Huma Abedin to the Muslim Brotherhood. That is, if you believe the connections at all." CNN anchor Wolf Blitzer also dismissed the conspiracy theory as "McCarthy-like." [Media Matters, 7/31/12 ; Politico, 7/19/12]

10. Klein Believes Conspiracy That Liberals Want To Collapse Economic System With "Financial Chaos"

Klein: Liberals Want To Overload "The Financial System So That There Is Financial Chaos." Klein said on conservative radio in November 2011 that liberals "want these financial problems" and "financial chaos" since it's the way the country can "accept a new kind of currency or a new kind of--or a changed economy." Klein cited the economic stimulus bill as an example of liberals engaging in "economic shock therapy." [Right Wing Watch, 11/4/11]

Dear John,

In his speech to the Democratic National Convention last night, Bill Clinton really nailed it. I particularly liked when he said:

"The most important question is, what kind of country do you want to live in? If you want a you're-on-your-own, winner-take-all society, you should support the Republican ticket. If you want a country of shared prosperity and shared responsibility – a we're-all-in-this-together society – you should vote for Barack Obama and Joe Biden."

That really sums up the choice voters have this November.

As we look forward to President Obama's and Vice President Biden's speeches tonight, please click here to join me in sending them a message that we stand with them to move this country forward.

Thanks for your support and for all you are doing to re-elect Obama/Biden this year.

Subject:	Trump

Now Trump attacks Huma. I expected a response such as this. My advice is that HRC make absolutely no comment herself in response to this, but that someone in the campaign, possibly you as chairman, issue a short statement. Along the lines of Mr. Trump is very good at dishing out attacks but is not very good at respecting those who ask hard questions about those attacks, especially when they come from women. Perhaps Mr. Trump feels the need to make angry statements to raise campaign money at fundraising events he previously promised to never hold to raise campaign money he previously promised to never accept.

Then, if HRC is directly asked about Trump I would suggest she avoid any direct rat-a-tat with him and at most say he does have a habit of insulting and berating whoever angers him at a given moment, especially women, but also men on many occasions, including former American POW's who I consider heroes. In daily life this behavior is merely rude. From a president it could start wars. Now lets focus on real issues such as.....

Subject:	Murder, She Wrote in Real Life

I'm experiencing a real life Murder, She Wrote here in Qatar. No one is dead (just a toaster oven) but there are so many suspects and motives.

There is a small toaster oven in our office kitchen area. The toaster and the coffee pot are both 110 volts, so each must be plugged into the 220 volt transformer when in use. The transformer only has room for one at a time, so a user must check and change, as appropriate, with each and every use. This seems to be a particular frustration to the three people who typically make the coffee in the morning.

TSgt Garrison is the only person that actually uses the toaster. He typically toasts his sandwich bread at lunch time. He has only been here for a month or so. Prior to his arrival the three who make coffee kept the coffee pot plugged in at all times.

This morning LT Farnsworth was the first in the office and went to the kitchen to make coffee. He reports that he walked in to discover that someone had cut the cord to the toaster oven, rendering it inoperable. Next to the toaster was a pair of scissors. The part of the cord that plugs into the outlet was not found.

LT Farnsworth is a reservist (i.e. he has a civilian job and only puts on the uniform one weekend a month and two weeks in the summer). He was activated and deployed here against his will and recently learned that he missed out on a promotion at his civilian job because his employer needs to fill the position immediately and will not wait for him to return. He is also a hothead--he reportedly committed a cardinal sin during predeployment training when he grew frustrated by his marksmanship and threw his rifle to the ground (very, very big no-no in military culture).

Lest you believe that LT Farnsworth is the only suspect, please note that TSgt Garrison lives with TSgt Long. The two are very different and seem to truly hate one another. It is unclear, however, if TSgt Long knows that TSgt Garrison uses the toaster oven because he works in a different building.

Additionally, yesterday we had a random safety inspection by the Camp As Sayliyah Fire Department. We passed, but were marked down because the toaster oven was on top of the microwave and that is a fire hazard. MSG Brown is responsible for office safety and thus was forced to take responsibility for the hazard despite the fact that she, too, works in a different building.

When we were alerted to the safety violation yesterday, my paralegal decided to assist by printing a sign that read "Do not place toaster on top of the microwave. It is a fire hazard." While well intentioned, she taped the paper sign directly on top of the toaster. This, as you may have guessed, is a fire hazard. The sign was removed and she was ridiculed.

I am truly at a loss. I feel like all these episodes of Murder, She Wrote have been preparing me to solve this mystery. Any insight or help you all may provide is greatly appreciated and I'll keep you posted of any developments.

Well aware of the issues/points of friction.I have gone out of my way in my testimony before Miller and Kennedy to highlight that reforms need to be done with teacher and union input. We also have been way out there on the right to organize and collective bargaining. Thought you might make an exception to your dispepsia this year for our c4 work on McCain's policy agenda. That is important and going well. See today's story in the Wash Post on McCain's trip to Kentucky, for example. Whatever you can do, I would appreciate.

I think we are getting really good traction with the mainstream press and have great web traffic. Elizabeth Edwards, for example, has been effectively beating up McCain on the Today Show, Good Morning America, NYT , and all the cables. Our tax papers on his economic plan have gotten very good pick up. McCain just had to respond to our attack that his no earmark rule would end aid to Israel. (He'd make an exception for that, of course). All that work has to be done c-4, so we are in need of more funding for the CAP Action Fund. SEIU is going to do 100k. Any chance NEA could match? Thanks for considering.

Team HRC:

We trail by 9 points in Oklahoma (41% HRC / 50% BS), a predominantly white state where BS got up on TV first and is at higher point levels post NH. Following an unanswered positive message from Sanders, the gap grows to 12 points (40% HRC / 52%), and unlike in other states – where a message from HRC allowed her to recoup all of Sanders' gains from his message – we do not make up any ground following a positive from us (40% HRC / 52% BS). Feels like OK is settling in earlier than other Super T states.

The Sanders positive message generates more intensity (29% much more likely) than either our exp/results/econ msg (19%) or an economic-only version of the "Barriers" message that makes no mention of discrimination (22%). This economic-only version of the "Barriers" message also does slightly better in the vote, moving the margin back to -9 (41% HRC /50% BS) vs. -14 with the exp/results/econ msg (39% HRC / 53% BS).

We do see some gains following negatives from both candidates, with Sanders advantage declining from +12 to +6 (43% HRC / 49% BS). Our top hits on Sanders among voters overall are on him not being fit to be Commander in Chief (35% very concerning), making our country like socialist countries in Europe (35%), the VA crisis (34%), and that his healthcare plan would raise taxes on the middle class (32%). Each of these generated more intensity than the top hit against Clinton (Wall Street; 31% very concerning).

Our top positive was on Planned Parenthood (30% much more likely), with Experience (27%), Results (26%), and Build on Obama progress (26%) forming a second tier, and an economic barriers message behind the rest of the pack (23%). Not much intensity on any of the HRC frames.

This data suggests there is little opportunity to build the vote up here for HRC.

I think I'm closer to Anna's gut instinct on this. I think folks believe Washington and Wall Street screwed up the housing market, which is causing the recession. Folks are mad at the blood and treasure expended in Iraq, but (granted, without research) I don't think they'll see Iraq as the cause of the Bush Recession. (Maybe we call it a Republican Recession?)

She has already been making this an issue. Not sure how in depth you are suggesting but seems like this should be manageable.

As a close reader of the case, I honestly believe that was vital to scaring Roberts off.

A brief reminder that Josh Fischman of Northwestern Law School (and, briefly, a passer-by here) is presenting at noon in the Hotung dining hall. Josh's paper deals with drugs, patents, and even jurisprudence...it is surely the only paper we've read this semester to cite The Bramble Bush. There is literally something for everyone.

The only point I would make is that I think, as we discussed, we need an overture that there's been a shift, that she needs to do something to convey that. We will couch this from a staff level in larger terms, but I think she needs to nod to that mentality too, sooner rather than later.

I think calling a reporter out of the blue would check that box, but maybe either way we need something a little more specific in here that says she will be on the campaign trail in the coming days, and she looks forward to answering questions about this, and about her plans for America's future, etc. You could stick it in the last graph pretty easily.

I am committed to doing everything I can to clear up any remaining confusion about this. That's why I've asked the State Department to publish 55,000 pages of my work emails. I've also repeatedly offered to answer questions before Congress and I look forward to doing so in October.

I hope the State Department and other relevant agencies will sort out as quickly as possible which emails are appropriate to release to the public. In the meantime, my team has worked with the Department to ensure these files are stored in a safe and secure manner. To put to rest any on-going security questions from other agencies, I have directed my team to give my email server, as well as a thumb drive containing copies of all the emails already provided to the State Department, to the Department of Justice.

Going forward, I will continue doing my part for transparency and accountability. I'm also going to focus on what's most important to everyday American families -- raising incomes, making college more affordable, and helping families get ahead and stay ahead. Subject: RE: Email statement

It's a good statement. Two suggestions.

1) I can see why you might not want to say who the turnover was to, but it seems to me omitting this may be misinterpreted and certainly will trigger another round of questioning. This may defeat the whole point of the exercise. The statement could be read to imply we turned over the thumb drive and server to the State Department—which we didn't ("There they go again—misleading, devious, non-transparent, tricky etc."). I would recommend saying "to the Department of Justice."

2) Maybe it's only me, but "hand over" seems a little pejorative—how about just "turn over"?

Watching the video, her tone was a little brusque and Jim has pointed out that she needs to work a bit on her expression as she listens to questions.
Nonetheless, the bites that are running on TV are good.

John,
I realize you are well on your way, but had we had a chance to talk at your book party in NYCity, I wanted to let you know that I would be glad to help in the transition. Having helped Rubin sort out his future role at the bank, I was inspired to sort out my own at the law firm, and, as a result, have some more time. In brief, I am 69 and not interested in a job, and have particular experience in two cabinet agencies. I was Joe Califano's Executive Assistant and then General Counsel at HEW, now HHS, and I put the Education Department together from scratch for President Carter and Shirley Hufstedler, the first Secretary of Education. (I also served as President Clinton's Special Presidential Emissary to Cyprus and helped Madeline Albright reorganize the State Department.)

I would be glad to help in any way I can.

Subject: DOJ's ADA Lawsuit Regarding Children in Nursing Homes

DOJ's ADA Lawsuit Regarding Children in Nursing Homes.
Information Bulletin #383 (8/2013)

The U.S. Department of Justice, Disability Rights Section, filed a very important ADA/Olmstead lawsuit against the State of Florida on behalf nearly 200 children with disabilities. USA v. The State of Florida http://www.ada.gov/olmstead/olmstead_cases_list2.htm#fla. These children "entered nursing facilities as children and grew up in these institutions" and were "unnecessarily segregated from their communities."

This lawsuit also claimed that "children with significant medical needs who reside in the community" face "serious risk of unnecessary institutionalization" because of "repeated service reductions and lengthy and unduly burdensome recertification processes."

While the lawsuit focused on children, DOJ's legal claims apply as well to adults in nursing facilities and at risk of institutionalization. Also, because many States have very similar ADA/Olmstead issues, we will point out some very important handles you might want to consider.

1. "Denial or Reduction of Medically Necessary Services."

DOJ asserted that Florida "in recent years unduly restricted the availability of many in-home services -- through a state regulation that requires Medicaid services to "be furnished in a manner not primarily intended for the convenience of the recipient or recipient's caretaker."

DOJ asserted that there were children in nursing facilities as a result of Florida's limits on in-home services and/or a failure to provide such services.

2. "Stagnant Reimbursement Rates for Home Health Services."

DOJ noted that many people were unable to access home health services due to the low Medicaid rates paid for such services. One comparison that is very helpful was DOJ noting that the rate paid to nursing homes for these children increased in the last 9 years by 28%, but home health rates have not increased comparably.

3. "Insufficient Capacity in HCBS Waiver Programs."

After pointing out that most of these children are eligible for Waiver services in the community, due to lengthy waiting lists children have been forced to enter nursing homes. Even with additional State Waiver funds in 2013, more than95% of the people on waiting lists will not receive community-based services.

4. "Lack of Sufficient Community-Based Alternatives."

DOJ stated there were "very few providers of care to children with significant medical needs" in non-institutional settings.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

5. "Failure to Offer Meaningful Opportunities to Move to the Community."

DOJ stated that "many of the Institutionalized Children remain in facilities for very long periods of time, even when it is apparent that their medical conditions would permit return to the community with appropriate supports. The continued stay of most of these children is the direct result of the State's failure to actively identify more integrated service options for them."

Related to the ADA/Olmstead arguments and claims, DOJ noted that "providing services in integrated settings can be accommodated through reasonable modifications to the State s existing services."

These five problems exist in many other States and cause adults (and children) to be unnecessarily segregated in nursing homes and other institutional settings, as well as to be at serious risk of institutionalization.

Dear John,

It's time … "to bring this race on home"!!

Today … with less than 30 days remaining till Election Day ... we are re-launching Go.JoeSestak.com or "GoJoe" for short - our campaign's interactive social network site that was instrumental in our primary victory and that empowers YOU to connect, coordinate and win!

An innovative organizing campaign website, GoJoe enables you, our enthusiastic supporters - both in Pennsylvania and across the nation - to take ownership and become involved in our historic campaign.

We are the first Democratic U.S. Senate campaign in our nation's history to have launched such a site. Our supporters are bright, passionate, and get things done:

- For those in Pennsylvania, GoJoe allows you to organize yourselves into neighborhood groups to reach voters in your area. You can host house parties, help register people to vote, get Letters to the Editor in your local papers, write a blog, or even open your own grassroots field office.
- For supporters outside Pennsylvania, GoJoe allows you to also host house-parties and phone banks where you can call voters in Pennsylvania, as well join groups and blog.
- No matter where you live, you can do remote phone banking from the comfort of your home.

Best of all, the GoJoe site is very easy to use.

- Once you go to the site , take a few minutes to sign up and set up your own personalized GoJoe profile. After that, click on the "Groups" tab to find and connect with other supporters and activists in your area and even create your own group .
- Click on "Events" to find out ways to get involved near you . If there aren't any events planned yet near your hometown, consider hosting one yourself. You can use GoJoe to invite people to your house or a local business, to get the ball rolling. Once you call a meeting, we'll contact you to give you the tools you need to make your event a success.

This campaign belongs to you - it reflects your core beliefs and the kind of leadership you want in Washington, D.C.

Together we are mobilizing … WE ARE ASKING EVERYONE TO PLEASE JOIN Go.JoeSestak.com

It's time to get involved … it's time to bring this race on home!.

Best regards,

Rich Sestak
Campaign Director

P.S. Today is the LAST DAY to register to vote. Please remind your family and friends to make sure that they are registered to vote in this critical election. You can get more details on how to register, absentee ballots, and where your polling place is on our home page .

Thanks again for taking the time to talk yesterday. And also for Tuur's present. He is thrilled with the cars. The world is very small.

Jennifer's birthday is on Sunday, but we'd like to celebrate her properly at HQ before she leaves for Iowa. In an attempt to actually surprise someone for their birthday, we will crash the end of the senior staff meeting tomorrow morning. Please gather outside the Iowa conference room around 9/9:05am. Subject: One week left.

John,

A week out from the Iowa Caucuses, after a long weekend full of events, a new poll has us at 23% among young voters.

Donate $23 now for our 23% poll.

As more people are starting to make their decision, our ground game is paying off. We have held over 170 events across Iowa, meeting in libraries, community centers, coffee shops, and the occasional pub. Iowans expect to meet candidates mulitple times and have their questions answered before they make their decision, and now that they are, we see them moving to our campaign.

Here is a picture of Governor O'Malley with one of our field organizers with commit to caucus cards gathered at one of our events this weekend.

Coming off of this great weekend, we are excited to see Governor O'Malley take the stage tonight at the CNN Democratic Town Hall. This will be the last time all three candidates will be in front of TV cameras in prime time answering questions directly from Iowans.

We are excited for the next 7 days. We are excited for you to see Governor O'Malley tonight at 9pm ET. We are excited to surprise the country on caucus night.

Governor O'Malley needs your help to keep the momentum going from a great weekend and a great poll, chip in now.

Thanks,
Team O'Malley

Attachments:	2015-10-14 Benghazi Testimony.docx

I want to share a first draft of HRC's opening statement for 10/22 with this small group and see if you think it's in the right direction. The structure and substance reflect conversations I've already had with many of you, but flagging a few notes:

-- Length. This is about 10 minutes, which is a bit shorter than we did in Jan 2013 but still fairly long. I'm not sure there's any reason to obsess over this, but keep it in mind. And, as Phil reminded me, we have the option for a longer statement for the record.

-- Tone. I aimed for high minded but it's possible this will come off as fairly pugilistic. Maybe that's just fine, but see what you think.

-- No Emails. You'll see there's nothing in here about emails. I think that's the right call, but if we decide that its impossible to ignore the elephant in the room, she could say this near the top: "I am also ready to answer questions about my email use as Secretary of State. As I have said many times, I should have used two separate accounts, one for work and one for personal matters. It was a mistake to use just one. It is up to you and ultimately to the American people to decide if it's wise and appropriate for a committee charged with investigating and learning from a national tragedy to spend its time focused on something like that."

When women are held back, our country is held back. But when women get ahead, America gets ahead.

Our country is held back when women of any age – whether on college campuses or military bases or even in their own homes – face sexual assault. But we move forward when women have the safety and security they deserve.

America moves forward when all women are guaranteed the right to make their own healthcare choices… not when those choices are taken away by an employer like Hobby Lobby.

We move forward when African American women who've worked hard their entire careers can retire with dignity, not when they're denied that chance because their wages were lower and they had less access to retirement plans.

We move forward when gay and transgender women are embraced as our colleagues and friends, not fired from good jobs because of who they love or who they are.

We move forward when women who came to this country in search of a better life can earn a path to citizenship, instead of being forced to work outside the formal economy for pennies on the dollar.

Our mothers and sisters and daughters are on the frontlines of all these battles. But these aren't women's fights. They're America's fights. We have to take them on together. And win them together.

Yet there are those who offer themselves as leaders of our country who take a different view.

They look the other way when bosses pay women less and then block laws to fix it.

They vote to defund Planned Parenthood and to let health insurance companies once again charge women more just because of their gender.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

They'd rather deport mothers – even mothers of American citizens – than risk the ire of talk radio.

Maybe some of them will go to a gay wedding, but they're all too quick to embrace discriminatory laws in places like Indiana and Arkansas.

They even play politics with victims of human trafficking.

This isn't the way to move America forward. It isn't leadership. And it's not going to create a single job, raise anyone's wages, or strengthen our families...

ORGANIZING for ACTION

John --

Last week, devastating budget cuts went into effect because Congress failed to compromise -- with some Republicans choosing to protect tax loopholes for millionaires and billionaires over programs that millions of middle-class families rely on.

This is frustrating, and it's at times like these when Washington feels more broken than ever. But here's what President Obama had to say:

"The question is: Can the American people help persuade their members of Congress to do the right thing? And I have a lot of confidence that over time, if the American people express their displeasure about how something is working, that eventually Congress responds."

So today, we're asking that Organizing for Action supporters do one easy thing to make their voice heard: Share this graphic on Facebook.

SHARE ON FACEBOOK

By keeping the conversation going on Facebook, you'll be making sure your friends and family are in the loop and have the tools to make their voice heard. Public opinion is going to persuade Congress to act -- but we all have to do our part in speaking up.

Thanks,

Subject: Re: Script

I trimmed a bit more. Mostly cut but added a few words here and there.

Hello. I'm sure you are hearing a lot about my emails when I was Secretary of State. So I want to take some time to try and explain what's going on to you directly, in one place, at one time, as best as I can.

In 2007, when I was a U.S. Senator, I got my first Blackberry. I used it to keep up with the news, with friends & family - like anyone else.

When President Obama asked me to serve as Secretary of State, it seemed simpler to have just one email address. After all, my predecessors at State had not relied on Department email. In hindsight, though, this has proven anything but simple. There's a difference between what we are allowed to do and what's smart to do. I shouldn't have used separate personal and government accounts. I should have set a standard that others were expected to meet. To do it all again, I would have used two email addresses.

But I can't do it all again. I can only tell you it was a mistake, regret it, explain it, and help the State Department and others fix any challenges it caused.

That's what I did. Now I want to explain what I didn't do.

I didn’t keep my email secret. Whenever I emailed, it was from my address. Whenever people emailed me, it was to my account. Work, personal, whatever.

I also didn't do this to skirt rules. And I didn’t do it to avoid having my records preserved. When the State Department asked former Secretaries of State who served since email was widely used to help fill out the archival record, I did so, printing 55,000 pages of email including anything related to my work at the State Department. To get a sense of how outdated some of the government’s archiving practices are, we had to print all 55,000 pages because that's what the rules demand. Believe me, printing more than 30,000 email instead of handing them over electronically isn't something anyone does by choice.

That's 30,000 more emails than every other former Secretary produced combined. No one else has produced their emails so far. I'm the only one.

And yes, there were 30,000 more messages that were completely personal and had nothing to do with official business.

I do believe transparency in government is important. And by this point, there isn't much you don't know about me. My finances are out there. My medical history is out there. You know how much I've made, where I've gone, what I'm allergic to.

Now I want to address the most serious aspect.

When it came to classified information, I certainly never used my Blackberry. And that had nothing to do with using a personal email address. If I had been hillaryclinton@state.gov I could not have used it for classified information either. At the State Department, mobile devices aren't used to communicate secrets. Almost everything of a classified nature was presented to me via paper or in person. When I traveled, elaborate steps were taken. Secure phones were set up, secure tents were constructed. I took my responsibilities in safeguarding our nation's secrets seriously. So did my team did. Everyone at the State Department did .

This process of looking backwards to see if something should have been classified at the time is fine. I don't want anything released to the public that puts us at risk. And we’re all learning that different agencies have very different views and procedures about what should be classified and what shouldn’t.

As Secretary I was proud of what we accomplished. I was proud of the thousands of people who've dedicated themselves to public service - including those who came into State with me and left with me. I was proud of them then, I'm proud of them now.

After nearly a year of offering to come to testify to Congress at any time and anyplace, in October I'll be on Capitol Hill before the committee looking at the tragic events of September 2012 in Benghazi, Libya. They wanted to talk to me behind closed doors, but I insisted on all of you being able to see what I was asked and how I answered.

I'm sure this issue will come up. It's unclear to me how it will help us understand what happened in Benghazi or how to help prevent future tragedies - but I'm going to do my best to answer whatever they ask.

And while I can't predict the future, let me finish by taking a stab:

• There will be many more emails to pour through.

• Some will be serious, some will be personal or mundane.

• You know I'm not great with a fax, but you're also going to learn my secret salad dressing recipe and who sent me LinkedIn requests. (And whose I didn't accept!)

But when the State Department finishes releasing all my emails, you will be able to see them all and judge for yourself.

Which is how it's supposed to work.

If you've made it this far, thank you for watching. And please spread the word to your friends and family.

That's the explanation - but it's no excuse. There's a difference between allowed to do and smart to do. I shouldn't have done it this way. I should have set the standard that others were expected to meet. To do it all again, I would have used two email addresses.

But what wasn't work wasn't the government's business. So I didn't keep those emails. I didn't print them. I knew no matter what I decided to do with them, I was in for criticism. So I chose to keep a modicum of privacy. I hope you can understand that.

Now I want to address the most serious aspect.

When it came to classified information, I certainly never used my Blackberry. And that had nothing to do with using a personal email address. If I had been hillaryclinton@state.gov I could not have used it for classified information either. At the State Department, mobile devices aren't used to communicate secrets. Almost everything of a classified nature was presented to me via paper or in person. When I traveled, elaborate steps were taken. Secure phones were set up, secure tents were constructed. More than once when a tent was set up in some far-away hotel, I was told to read the classified material with the blanket over my head. No, that's not a joke. I took my responsibilities in safeguarding our nation's secrets seriously.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

So did my team did. Everyone at the State Department did .

This process of looking backwards to see if something should have been classified at the time is fine. I don't want anything released to the public that puts us at risk. And we're all learning that different agencies have very different views and procedures about what should be classified and what shouldn't. What's not fine is to criticize people – especially career officials who have devoted their lives to serving our country -- for handling what they didn't know might be deemed classified years later by another part of the government. That's an impossible standard to meet. Members of Congress and their staff also handled some of these messages. Some articles being written about this issue today contain classified information. Should someone sending that article to a colleague be told in 2020 that they broke the rules? I hope not.

As for the security of my email, in more than a little bit of irony, every day we learn of a new hack by the Chinese, by the Russians. That millions of Americans' personal information has been stolen.

As Secretary I was proud of what we accomplished. I was proud of the thousands of people who've dedicated themselves to public service - including those who came into State with me and left with me. I was proud of them then, I'm proud of them now.

I wish that a video was enough to address this. I know it isn't though. But I wanted to try to put everything in one place.

Along those lines, after nearly a year of offering to come up at any time anyplace, in October I'll be on Capitol Hill before the committee looking at the tragic events of September 2012 in Benghazi, Libya. They wanted to talk to me behind closed doors, but I insisted on all of you being able to see what I was asked and how I answered.

And while I can't predict the future, let me finish by taking a stab:

• There will be many more email to pour through.

• Some will be serious, some will be embarrassing.

• You know I'm not great with a fax, but you're also going to learn my secret salad dressing recipe and who sent me LinkedIn requests. (And whose I didn't accept!)

• There will be more dramatic leaks and assertions that prove to be untrue.

But at some point, you're going to have them all. And if you suffer through all 55,000 pages, you'll be able to judge for yourself.

Which is how it's supposed to work.

Subject:	Koch Brothers $12.7m gift to Concerned Veterans for America

John -

Earlier this week, "the main arm" of the Koch Brothers' political network, Freedom Partners, disclosed it's political giving for 2014 in their annual tax filing. We thought you'd find this interesting:

They granted $12.7m to Concerned Veterans for America for "General Support." It was Freedom Partners' largest gift of the year.

So what are the Koch Brothers' looking for with their gift to Concerned Veterans of America? It's simple: The privatization of the veterans' health care and military retirement plans, organizing for the repeal Obamacare, and dismantling the unions that work within the Department of Veterans Affairs.

In 2016, only VoteVets can offer a counterweight to this massive, and growing, astroturf organization.

Make a $3 contribution to VoteVets, and help us elevate the voices of progressive veterans during the 2016 campaign.

Concerned Veterans for America are already hitting Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders. They've run ads attacking Democrats up for election in 2016 and 2018, and they've thrown their weight behind incumbent Tea Party leaders in the fight to privatize VA care.

Your contribution to VoteVets will go directly towards countering their work in the year ahead.

All our best,

The Team at VoteVets

John,

50 years after the Equal Pay Act was signed into law by President Kennedy, women still make only 77 cents for every dollar a man makes.

That's not only unfair, it's harmful. Wives, mothers, daughters -- they all suffer. But, ultimately, the wage gap hurts families, the middle class and the entire economy.

The Paycheck Fairness Act would help close this gap, but we need to show that the public is behind this bill. Will you join me in supporting this important piece of legislation?

With your help, we can pass this critical bill.

AMERICANSUNITED FOR CHANGE

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Date: August 1st, 2008

Need for Second Economic Recovery Package Clear After U.S. Jobless Rate Hits 4-Year High

51,000 More U.S. Jobs Lost in July; Unemployment Rate Jumps to 5.7%; Total Job Losses This Year Now 463,000; 7th Straight Month of Negative Job Growth in the Bush Economy – Do Bush's Allies in Congress See a Need for a 2nd Economic Boost Yet?

"I have serious doubts about whether we really need a second stimulus" – House Minority Leader John A. Boehner, R-Ohio [Congressional Quarterly, 7/31/08]

Washington D.C. – Americans United for Change – the non-profit progressive issue-advocacy group that recently launched its national Bush Legacy Tour – called on Bush's allies in Congress to open their eyes to the urgent need for a second economic recovery package in the face of the latest disappointed jobless numbers from the Labor Department that found U.S. employers cut 51,000 more jobs in July, raising the jobless rate to a 4-year high of 5.7%. This was the seventh straight month of negative job growth under the Bush economy, bringing the total lost jobs this year to 463,000.

In efforts to turn the economy back in the right direction, the Democratic leadership in the U.S. House and Senate are expected to move forward on another comprehensive economic recovery package in September that will likely include an extension of unemployment insurance benefits, low-income home heating assistance, an expansion of the food stamp program, and transportation infrastructure improvements that would create well over 100,000 new jobs.

"How many more Americans have to lose their jobs, their healthcare and their dignity before Bush's allies in Congress realize that there's much more to be done to help their constituents making tough choices and difficult sacrifices under the worsening Bush economy," said Jeremy Funk, of Americans United for Change. "You would think that the same Republicans -- like GOP House Leader Boehner - who often preach about personal responsibility would take more than a little responsibility themselves after rubberstamping Bush's failed "trickle-down" economic policies that got us into this mess to be begin with. We hope that Leader Boehner and his colleagues will finally abandon this President, do the right thing and support an economic recovery."

"We hope that Senator John McCain, especially, will support the second economic recovery package and abandon his calls for more of same failed Bush economic policies. In June, Senator McCain proclaimed: "I have a great belief that the fundamentals of the economy are very strong. Very strong." and before that told the American people their economic struggles were merely "psychological" . We hope Senator McCain now takes responsibility for his misguided rhetoric and votes and resists the urge to point to seven straight months of lost jobs as ripe cause for more Corporate welfare and more tax cuts for millionaires that never manage to 'trickle-down' to everyone else -- which remains McCain's best answer to an economy slipping further towards recession."

We have an updated oil/gas number: $1,069,854.

Since it's over a million, I think it's worth updating the doc...

Thanks,

DD

MCCAIN, LIKE BUSH, ON THE SIDE OF BIG OIL, NOT AMERICAN FAMILIES

Over the next two days, McCain is holding five fundraisers across Texas. Tomorrow, Sen. McCain will deliver a speech on energy policy in Houston, TX. Instead of offering relief to families who are hurting, McCain only offers more tax breaks for Big Oil.

American families are hurting. The price of gas has hit $4 a gallon and is only expected to keep rising.

McCain has taken more than $780,000 from the oil and gas industry according to an analysis by Campaign Money Watch <http://campaignmoney.org/pressroom/2008/05/12/reform-watchdog-group-to-mccain-fire-the-lobbyists> . Shell Oil Company President John Hofmeister is a donor and some of the biggest oil companies, including Exxon Mobil, Chevron and Hess, have given thousands to McCain.

McCain, like Bush, is surrounded by Big Oil lobbyists. At least 15 staffers or fundraisers for McCain's campaign have lobbied for Big Oil and as a group, they have received more than $6.5 million in lobbying contracts, according to data from the Center for Responsive Politics.

McCain, like Bush, offers billions in tax cuts for Big Oil, but no relief for families. According to the Center for American Progress Action Fund <http://thinkprogress.org/wonkroom/2008/03/27/mccain-petroleum/> , McCain's tax plan gives nearly $4 billion in tax breaks to the top five American oil companies, but gives families very little. Economists have panned McCain's gas tax holiday, saying it won't help families with gas prices.

McCain's record does not live up to his rhetoric on energy issues. McCain has repeatedly voted against and skipped votes <http://www.mccainsource.com/homefront?id=0004> on renewable energy and increased fuel efficiency.

- McCain has a dismal 24% lifetime rating from the League of Conservation Voters <http://lcv-ftp.org/LCV/mco.pdf> .

We're thrilled to invite you to see our latest Vital Pictures' film, American Denial, on PBS' Independent Lens series, Monday, February 23 at 10:00 pm EST (check your local listings).

In 1938, Swedish researcher and Nobel Laureate Gunnar Myrdal plunges into America's Jim Crow South. The resulting study, An American Dilemma (1944), poses a profoundly unsettling question: How can a people devoted to the American Creed of equality, justice and opportunity for all continue to erect obstacles to those ends based on race? Through Myrdal's story and contemporary racial dynamics, American Denial explores how denial, cognitive dissonance, and implicit bias persist and shape all of our lives.

We have been excited by the pre-broadcast buzz American Denial has already generated. We look forward to hearing your thoughts via Facebook .

June 22nd Nightly Press Traffic Summary

- Julie Bykowicz and Ken Thomas (AP) have a story running tomorrow morning about Hillary Clinton's fundraising thus far -- will include a ballpark estimate of how much we've raised based on our bigger-ticket events.
- Anne Gearan is doing a story for tomorrow that will deal with Hillary Clinton and race in Arkansas. She has reached out to the Arkansas Minority Leader to get his thoughts. The story will likely touch on the bill that WJC signed into law regarding confederate recognition on the state flag.
- Byron Tau (WSJ) has inquired about the batch of emails from Sid Blumenthal that were just released by the Benghazi Committee. As of now, we are not engaging with folks on this.
- The Boston Globe has a profile of Charlie Baker running this weekend (the HRC advisor, not the governor.)
- Gabe Debenedetti is working on a curtain-raiser ahead of Hillary's appearance at the Virgina JJ dinner about the relationship between Terry McCaullife and our campaign.
- Other outstanding stories include:
    - Ruby Cramer on our grassroots organizing
    - Pat Healy/Maggie Haberman on cost of progressive proposals
    - Amy Chozick/Maggie Haberman on supporter housing (Next Sunday)
    - PolitiFact on HRC/bills passed

Talked to Kirsten's chief. Looks like she's already expressed support for Bernie (see below), but he thinks they can keep her from being too vocal.

Gillibrand would not endorse my guy who is homegrown for the district bc she won't go against a woman (even though I hear she is not a fan of Zephyr). Zephyr would be out of her mind happy to get attention from Gillibrand bc she is very popular here.

But also bc it's so contentious here: Dems are really split between Bernie and Hillary and it gets nasty. Zephyr would be insane to come out in favor of one or the other at this point in the race. Also here she has to paint herself as a moderate not a progressive bc she can't win without some crossover.

Zephyr. Yes. Big problem.

But I got mad at our guy bc he has weak political instincts. I set him up with great connections (not just donors but real strategists) and he failed to follow up etc.

Zephyr is going to lose big time here. Our guy would have won but he has no path to win the primary. Ugh. I could go on and on. See I am learning politics from the ground level up. Haha.

Dear Neera,

We hope that you are off to a happy and healthy new year. Although there are still eight months until our 20th Reunion on October 21-23, that time has a way of passing all too quickly. Therefore, this letter brings two requests for your consideration.

First, please attend our reunion! Alumni Weekend will be a rare opportunity to catch up with many friends in a group setting and to reconnect with old friends we have not seen in many years. The formal invitation is forthcoming, but in the meantime you can find more information by visiting www.law.yale.edu/aw2016 .

Second, please consider a gift or multi-year pledge in honor of our 20th Reunion. We are pleased to report that due to the support of 34 classmates (17% of the class), thus far we have raised $139,202 in gifts and pledges. For our 20th Reunion, we would love to achieve 100% participation if possible.

We hope you will give as generously as you can. Please keep in mind that any amount pledged can be paid over five years, but the full amount will be credited to our 20th Reunion Campaign total. Our collective generosity will support the Law School's goal to expand clinical and experiential learning for students, and increase financial aid and loan forgiveness for recent graduates. Your gift will also preserve the programs and activities that you found most rewarding during your Yale Law School experience.

You know what a difference a legal education at Yale has made in your life. The Law School continues to have the finest faculty, an exhilarating academic environment, and a stimulating mix of students—in short, all of the ingredients for an extraordinary legal education. Your support at any level will help ensure that today's students continue to have access to this unique opportunity.

A member of our class Reunion Gift Committee will contact you soon about your participation in our 20th Reunion Campaign. But if you would like to make your gift or pledge today, please click here .

We thank you in advance for your support, and we look forward to seeing you in New Haven this October to celebrate our 20th Reunion.

Sincerely,
Omar Dajani '96, Allegra Lawrence-Hardy '96, J. Welby Leaman '96, and Tarun Stewart '96

Annual Greek-American White House Meeting Enables Obama-Varoufakis Sideline Discussion About Greek Economic Crisis

WASHINGTON, DC, April 17, 2015 --Yesterday's White House Greek Independence Day celebration began with Vice President Joe Biden welcoming the leadership of Greek Orthodox Archbishop of America Demetrios and thanking Andy Manatos for creating and maintaining this annual White House meeting of Greek-American leaders with each of the five US Presidents who have served over the last 29 years. It ended with an important sideline meeting between President Barack Obama and Greek Finance Minister Yanis Varoufakis regarding Greece's financial crisis.

All was preceded by, as it is every year, a private meeting between Archbishop Demetrios and President Obama, along with Vice President Biden.

Manatos said, "This annual meeting has been a boon for Hellenism and Orthodoxy as was shown by yesterday's sideline meeting between the President and Greece's Finance Minister at such a crucial time for Greece. US Presidents' time is in such demand that they rarely meet with Prime Ministers and virtually never with Finance Ministers. So yesterday's meeting was not a small thing."

"Over the years our meeting has enabled crucial information about Greece, Cyprus and the Ecumenical Patriarchate to reach the President's ear. It has, as well, elevated the stature of the Greek-American community in Washington. Before this, our community had a hard time meeting even with Deputy Assistant Secretaries. Today, all parts of our government follow their President's lead.

"Hellenes who work closely with us have enabled us to again achieve the seemingly impossible. Although we Greek-Americans are only one out of 250 Americans and the Irish are one out of nine Americans, we are the only two nationalities able to meet with the President each year. This is the result of the combination of a number of factors: our influential Greek Orthodox and Hellenic friends across the country; the close cooperation of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese's Father Alex Karloutsos; Manatos & Manatos' 80 years of inside-Washington expertise, and our firm's willingness to contribute $5 million worth of free work each year to Hellenic and Orthodox issues; and the participants in the Coordinated Effort of Hellenes.

"We Hellenes have again been able to rise far above the norm as we have in the ancient world, during WWII and the Holocaust, and in our more modern successes in America and around the world," said Manatos.

NARAL Pro-Choice America

Dear John,

Mere minutes after the news of Associate Justice Antonin Scalia's unexpected passing broke, Republicans were already vowing to delay any and all of President Obama's nominees until one of their anti-choice presidential candidates is in the White House in 2017.[1] (Yeah, right. Keep dreaming.)

This is ridiculous and unacceptable. Tell GOP senators to do their jobs and hold a hearing and an up-or-down vote on President Obama's Supreme Court nominee.

We live in a time of unprecedented threats to reproductive freedom, where the rights set down in Roe v. Wade literally hang in the balance. In Whole Women's Health v. Hellerstedt, which the justices are hearing next Wednesday, access to abortion for millions of women is at stake.

And in Zubik v. Burwell, the justices will yet again debate the Affordable Care Act's contraceptive-coverage policy and decide whether women have a right to no-pay birth control coverage without the interference of their bosses.[2]

By promising to REFUSE to do their jobs by moving a nominee through the Senate confirmation process, Republican leaders are jeopardizing Americans' fundamental rights. We deserve to have these important cases heard by a full bench at the Supreme Court to ensure that justice is truly achieved.

Click here to add your name to tell Republican senators to do their jobs and follow their constitutional obligation to hold hearings on a Supreme Court nominee.

There's too much at stake for women's health right now to play politics with a court vacancy. When we rally at the Supreme Court next Wednesday, we need to know our work will truly go toward protecting and expanding reproductive freedom in this country.

Thank you for speaking out.

people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with about 50,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, almost 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. That is absolutely inexcusable.

I believe there's even more we can – and must – do together. For starters, let's continue to increase HIV and AIDS research and invest in the promising innovations that research is producing. Medications like PrEP are proving effective in preventing HIV infection; we should expand access to that drug for everyone, including at-risk populations. We should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide healthcare to those with HIV and AIDS. We should call on states to reform outdated and stigmatizing HIV criminalization laws. We should increase funding for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses and drug costs, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge patients by jacking up the price of lifesaving medications.

We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them and to future generations to continue that fight together. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. As president, I promise you that I will not let up until we reach that goal. We will not leave anyone behind.

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I made a mistake in speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. My comment was just wrong.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.
To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.
The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.
If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.
We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.
I've been committed to this work for a long time. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with 40,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, more than 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. Could we delete "and I said so right away"? Don't think that gets us any extra credit and think it just sounds a hair defensive.

I've heard from countless people who are hurt and disappointed by what I said yesterday at Nancy Reagan's funeral about the Reagans' record on HIV/AIDS, and I understand why. The comment was just wrong, and I said so right away.

The Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV/AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite is true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation, but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis, and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't hear and maybe don't even know – the unsung heroes who fought on the front lines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists, and ordinary people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV/AIDS. Their courage and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo saved lives.

We've come a long way since. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good, and erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This is work that I've been committed to for a long time. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV/AIDS around the globe. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance, and increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV (including key populations at risk of discrimination), and investing in innovative research and technology.

I believe there's even more we can do together. For starters, we should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide health care to those living with HIV/AIDS. And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge prices of lifesaving medications. And we should expand access to medications like PrEP.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them, and to future generations, to continue that fight together. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full, happy lives. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. And we can't let up until we reach that goal.

Have floated this idea in a couple of places, but putting it on this thread as well--we have two places online that we could respond to in terms of digital organizing perspective. There is an Out for Hillary group with 14k members that I think some kind of extended engagment over this would be helpful--an AMA with Dominic/ Robby/Dennis, a special Note (which is a long form format over Facebook), re-purposing the Medium piece there, etc would go a long way. Our other option is Reddit, which has an extremely vocal core of LGBT members, but I would prioritize this Facebook group, which is the largest LGBT community of Hillary's supporters I know. These are friendlies, they are already carrying water for us making sure the apology is out there, and they firmly sit in groups 1 and 2 that Dom identified.

Whatever we did to send our LGBT talking points to folks has really worked, they are popping up everywhere on the supporter Facebook groups.

I stayed with Chad last night who was receiving lots of angry calls and notes from people that he didn't call her out by name. He wouldn't do that to her and kept stressing she just made a mistake, but suggested we need to do something more today to protect her. She has a great record and we lost a lot of ground messaging-wise.

Hi all,

I wanted to start a new thread to give a brief update about what I'm hearing from folks and get up to speed on how we're thinking of responding in the short and long term. (Sending to a smaller group from yesterday's call but please do loop in others who should be a part of this convo.)

First, as you can imagine, most people are expressing palpable anger and hurt over the comments. I won't belabor the point because I'm sure we all fielded calls, texts, tweets in the last 24 hours over this. But suffice to say, we aren't in a good place with the community right now.

If I had to break things down, I'd put people into three categories: 1) supporters who were horrified at the comment but accept the apology; 2) supporters who are angry and can only be mollified with a longer statement, tv appearance, roundtable, or something else big that shows she "gets it." They will continue to make hay in the meantime; and 3) Bernie folks who are happy to have a new line of attack.

What concerns me is that in that second group are a lot folks from Queer Nation, ACT UP, and other activists who are out, loud, and not afraid of direct action or aggressive confrontation. Given that, I'd love if we could build on yesterday's response -- and quickly. I don't want this to fester.

I assume we're prepping an answer for tomorrow's town hall, but has there been talk in the office of doing more today?

Looking ahead, is it possible to bump up an HIV / AIDS policy rollout? Is there any interest in putting a roundtable conversation or OTR together? (Robbie Kaplan has already volunteered GMHC.)

Would love to know where your heads are at and to be a part of the conversation today about next steps and moving forward.

RELEASE: Van Hollen, Feder Discuss Conservative Approaches To Health Care

Van Hollen Says Conservatives Trying to "Hide The Ball" From Americans And "Break Promise" to Propose Bill Because Their Approach Would Be "Arrow In The Heart Of Employer-Based Health Coverage"; Feder Explains Unraveling Employer-Based System Has Been Longstanding Goal For Conservatives

Washington, DC

—On a conference call today hosted by the Center for American Progress Action Fund, Congressman Chris Van Hollen, Assistant to the Speaker of the House and CAPAF Senior Fellow Judy Feder discussed the dearth of proposals offered by conservatives, and suggested that the reason for the lack of details may be a hesitancy to explain to the American people that they want to unravel the employer-based health care system and put more Americans at risk of losing the insurance they have now.

Congressman Van Hollen said, "As you know, in the house, their quarterback on health care issues, Roy Blunt, promised that they would present a health reform bill, as their alternative, to the American people, so we can see where they were on this very important policy question. It appears that they are going to break that promise. They're not going to present a Republican alternative bill, and unfortunately the American people will not be able to see the details of some of the ideas that have been presented on the Republican side. Clearly they want to hide the ball from the American people because they know the American people are not going to like the consequences of whatever proposal they might roll out, based on the fragments that they've been presented already, which suggest that what the Republicans primarily are focused on is politics and not policy."

Congressman Van Hollen continued, "they've not drawn those fragments together and come up with a piece of Republican legislation because the minute they put those different ideas and fragments into a bill that is labeled the 'Republican alternative bill,' the American people will see that it will be an arrow in the heart of employer-based health coverage."

"What we do know is that fragments of the legislation that they have introduced to date – which in various ways including the way they treat employer based health plans from a tax perspective – would have the impact of providing great disincentives for employers who are currently providing health insurance and throwing them into the individual marketplace to fend for themselves and give them essentially a tax credit that does not begin to cover the costs of their health care."

CAPAF Senior Fellow Judy Feder explained that unraveling the employer-based health care system has been a longstanding goal for conservatives: "These Republican ideas reflect a long standing – and I'm talking back to the early 80's – strategy that Republicans have advocated to tax our benefits and unravel the employer-sponsored market we count on... and essentially puts us on our own against the insurance companies." Dr. Feder explained that conservatives in Congress are on record supporting these ideas: "It is exactly the same strategy in the Ryan bill, the so-called Patients Choice Act [also introduced by Sen. Coburn], the choices don't look so good as we analyze them, and, actually, in the Senate HELP Committee, all the members, except for one, actually voted for a proposal of this kind."

Elaborating on conservative ideas, Dr. Feder said, "those aren't about bending the curve, those are about undermining and unraveling the employer-sponsored health insurance system." On the other hand, progressives "are trying to strengthen it, not take it apart, and certainly not throw people who count on their employer-sponsored health insurance into an individual health insurance market with too little money and insufficient rules to protect us against discrimination based on pre-existing conditions."

Ami:

We will reach out to some key US drug companies and see whether they are willing to make a donation to help clear ADAP lists and provide a cushion for others whose treatment might be jeopardized over the next two years. We will also talk with HHS and others and see how we might structure a program if we can get the drug companies to agree. If we can put a deal together, we will put see about an event to announce it with President Clinton.

We do not know if we will be successful, but we will find out by early to mid next week.

After we do this we will talk about whether we want to create a program to move CHAI into domestic AIDS work.

If we can succeed in putting together a program like this, the activist community will be divided. Some will be supportive. Others will not be happy because they want to bring low priced generics to the US and will view this as too small a step. We will not discuss what we are doing with the activist community until we know whether we can put together a deal.

Subject:	Cuccinelli's latest endorsement

Friend,

So, this is what happens when you believe abortion should be illegal even in the case of rape or incest?

Help Terry fight back against Cuccinelli's extremist supporters | Goal: $50,000 by MIDNIGHT | DONATE NOW

Yesterday, the Susan B. Anthony List — a radical anti-choice group — rewarded Ken Cuccinelli with $1.5 million in support because of his career-long history of standing between women and their doctors. This is the same group that defended both Todd Akin and Richard Mourdock after their offensive comments about rape.

If we are going to be able to compete with this kind of extremist support for Cuccinelli, we need your help now more than ever.

Make a $5 donation before the midnight fundraising deadline and help us reach Terry's $50,000 online fundraising goal — we're just $21,817 away!

Ken Cuccinelli's belief that abortion should be illegal even in cases of rape, incest, and health of the mother is so out of the mainstream, it prompted the president of the Susan B. Anthony List to declare, "We don't find people like this very often."

She's right: Ken Cuccinelli is the perfect candidate for an extremist anti-choice group.

As Attorney General, Cuccinelli forced the state board of health to put unnecessary restrictions on abortion clinics, which could cause them to shut down. And just last month, he suggested that opponents of birth control coverage should go to jail to protest the Affordable Care Act's coverage of contraception.

Will you make a $5 donation before tonight's midnight deadline to help Terry fight back?

At a time when Virginia needs a renewed focus on job creation, Ken Cuccinelli is focused only on moving our social policies to the extreme right.

Thanks for supporting Terry at this critical hour,

Emily Aden

THE ALMANAC OF AMERICAN POLITICS 2010 EDITION

She Hit Him First.

Democrat David Obey, the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, was expelled from a Catholic school as a child for hitting a nun who had tried to discipline him with a swat. He now represents the 7th District of Wisconsin.

Obey couldn't break his habit of speaking out after being elected to Congress. In 2006, he called President George Bush's budget "wrongheaded and embarrassing." In 2007, when democrats cheered Obey as he arrived on the House floor to discuss an Iraq appropriations bill, he yelled in frustration, "I don't want your applause! I want your damned votes!" In 2009, after Obama's election as president, Obey derisively referred to him as "crown prince."

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS ACTION FUND

Dear John:

The 2010 election season is heating up, and some of our most loyal environmental allies are in the fight of their political lives.

The catastrophe in the Gulf has underscored our need for leaders who will stand up to Big Oil and other dirty polluters.

You can help ensure that we elect and re-elect leaders who will protect our planet by giving through LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen today.

Click here to donate to our endorsed pro-environment candidates through GiveGreen!

Don't let Big Oil win this fall!

Donate to pro-environment candidates through GiveGreen to ensure environmental victories in November.

Tea Party groups and environmental foes like Sarah Palin and Glenn Beck are rallying opposition to environmental champions like Representative Tom Perriello in Virginia and Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada.

And, a January Supreme Court decision gave Big Oil, Dirty Coal, and other corporate polluters free reign to spend unlimited amounts of money in federal elections to elect their cohorts and defeat our allies. As a matter of fact, The Washington Post recently reported that CEOs of big business are looking for ways to have the greatest influence on the 2010 midterms—while deceptively hiding their tracks

Don't let polluting special interests drown out your voice. Support pro-environment candidates who will fight for a clean energy future.

Click here to donate through GiveGreen now!

Your support of pro-environment candidates can really make a difference. Consider that in 2008 LCV and our state LCV partners helped elect 28 new pro-environment leaders to the House of Representatives. In 2009, the historic American Clean Energy and Security Act passed in the House by just seven votes.

With critical environmental legislation passing by just a few votes, you can see how important it is to elect leaders who won't side with Big Oil at the expense of our environment. And, when you contribute to candidates through LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen program, you help increase our collective environmental strength in Congress by demonstrating your support for clean energy and the environment.

Please, support GiveGreen candidates today for a cleaner, healthier planet tomorrow. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski

Ohio is proud to be the state which - once again- propelled President Barack Obama back to the White House.

Something special needs to be written about the men and women of Ohio who made this happen. They are remarkable people. I went door-to-door for eight hours yesterday in a very poor and mostly white section of Columbus and was inspired by people's stories and their resolve to get out and vote.

Thanks Susan and thank you to all of you for who you are and what you do to make our nation better and stronger.

Election 2012: Sex, lies and videotape

By Susan Brooks Thistlethwaite

A man fills out paper work to participate in the final day of early voting at the Lancaster Board of Elections on Nov. 5, 2012 in Lancaster, Ohio. (AFP/GETTY IMAGES)President Obama's Christian faith, or the Mormon faith of Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney, did not become important issues after the primaries of election year 2012. Even the fact that Romney is a significant leader in the Mormon Church did not really emerge as noteworthy after he was selected as the GOP nominee.

There was, of course, faith activism all over the political and faith landscape. But the real "religious" questions of 2012 were theological. To me, the most important theological questions were: Are women fully human or not? Does lying matter and why? Is there one nation, or are there 47 percent of Americans who don't matter?

All of these questions were highly politically contested and religious interpretations figured prominently in those ideological struggles.

Sex: War on Women

In 1949, French philosopher Simone de Beauvoir analyzed the persistence of women's inequality, calling women "The Second Sex." In the 2012 election year, this is better termed the "War on Women ." The "War on Women" is a political designation for a host of Republican initiatives at the local, state and federal level to restrict women's rights, especially but not exclusively women's reproductive rights, that took central stage in 2012.

The "War on Women ," however, is also a theological issue. The underlying presumption of those who would pursue policies that limit women's reproductive choices, or allow it to be legal for women to be paid less than men who do the same job, is that women are not of equal dignity and worth. They also presume that women do not have "freedom of conscience" and can exercise it equally well as men.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The important visual for the idea that 2012 was a year when the GOP was conducting a "War on Women" was the photo of an all-male panel on contraception conducted in House of Representatives. Sandra Fluke, a Georgetown University Law School Student, was excluded from the panel because, it was said, "the hearing wasn't about 'birth control,' it was about 'freedom of religion and conscience.'"

So, for me, as a Christian, that became a core theological question: Don't women have consciences? Don't women have religious freedom too?

The "War on Women" is, at its base, an attack on women's freedom and dignity. It had, however, so many manifestations in the 2012 election year, it is difficult to name them all. From Romney's promises to defund Planned Parenthood, to the huge struggle in Virginia over aninternal ultrasound procedure, the "trans-vaginal probe," being required for women seeking an abortion, to how rape is "defined" as in the infamous comments by Rep. Todd Akin that "legitimate rape" rarely causes pregnancy that became such an issue in that Missouri Senate race, and beyond, there were numerous examples.

Theological polarization ran in parallel to political polarization and this was well illustrated per Akin and his views. Progressive and moderate Christians contested Akin's "legitimate rape" comments and thereligious right supported him. The religious right is credited as the force that kept Akin in the race.

But the "War on Women" is not confined to reproductive rights issues. Workplace discrimination, and equal pay for equal work as now required in the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act signed by President Obama, is another collection of political issues that are also theological issues. Are women human? Are they equal in theological dignity and worth?

At the end of the day, the host of issues dubbed "The War on Women" are theological issues having to do with, as in the Christian tradition, "male and female" being created in the image of God (Genesis 1:27). Theologically speaking, then, I believe women are equally and fully human in dignity and worth, women do have consciences, and they can act on their religious consciences and make informed moral choices about their reproductive lives.

Lies: The "Post-truth" election

It is scarcely unusual for politicians to frame events and policies so that they can be claimed to support their views. Thomas Jefferson, for example, in part interpreted prohibiting "establishment" of religion as a tax issue and got it included in the Constitution. Politicians have been widely known to state opinion as "fact" and ignore facts not of their liking. Yes, politicians have even lied to get themselves elected. No one is shocked to hear this.

Election 2012, however, was the year of "post-truth." For the first time, the idea emerged that political lying simply didn't matter. This is a profound theological issue.

One political party, the Republican Party, put out statements and ads that were lies, that is, proven to be factually incorrect, and simply said it didn't matter. And they did it over and over again, while denigrating "fact-checking." The Romney campaign declined, as one surrogate said, to let their campaign "be dictated by fact-checkers."

A false equivalence emerged, where media outlets often chose not to pursue the policy of repeated, systematic and deliberate lying by the Romney campaign and chose instead to focus on 'they both do it.'

Politicians lie. It's the case. But that's not the story of the 2012 election. The story is the complete contempt Republicans showed for being caught in lies, and instead of issuing "corrections," merely repeated the lie. An example of this kind of lying is the canard that after being elected, President Obama went on an "apology tour." This lie was repeated over and over again, with relative impunity from the press. President Obama himself called out this lie as a "whopper" in the last presidential debate with Mitt Romney.

It's not just hamburgers and fries that are supersized in America these days. The lies have been supersized as well. But it is not the size of the lie that is the deeply troubling theological issue. The issue is a spreading contempt for the idea that truth versus falsehood even matters.

In my view, this is the first "post-truth" election, and if it is allowed to continue, "Be warned: 'post-truthfulness' will inevitably bleed into all areas of our lives as a result, from intimate relations to our social and work lives. It is the essence of the amoral, where individuals or whole nations are unable to perceive or are indifferent to questions of right or wrong."

Political lying as deliberate strategy, one can argue, was first crafted by Richard Nixon. Nixon developed the art of political lying throughout his campaign and his presidency, and continued to tell lies despite corrections. Richard Nixon began this as a candidate and pursued it through his deeply destructive presidency. According to Rick Perlstein, in "Nixonland: The Rise of a President and the Fracturing of America," lying was Nixon's default, as "Nixon would lie about anything."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Post-truth," defined as 'lying doesn't matter,' needs to be called out and explicitly rejected as Republican policy. This needs to be done without false equivalence. Now, of course, any politician or party who deliberately lies should be called out and forced to issue a correction.

The future of "post-truth," however, is not in the hands of politicians of either party. It in the hands of the electorate and each voter needs to examine her or his conscience on this development.

Ask yourself this: don't I, at some level, want my preferred version of reality to be true, even if it's not? "Post-truth" works because people desire their own version of reality, and in the age of the Internet, you can get it if you want it.

Moral reasoning should lead you to reject that temptation.

Videotape: the 47 percent

Election 2012 was the year Americans stopped being one people. Occupy Wall Street, the protest movement begun in the fall of 2011, contributed the language of the 1 percent, the American mega-rich, versus the rest of America, called the 99 percent. This language has entered the American lexicon and is the greatest success of Occupy.

The "47 percent" burst upon the 2012 political scene with the nowinfamous videotape of candidate Mitt Romney telling attendees at a "$50,000-a-plate dinner that 47 percent of Americans—those who back President Obama—are 'victims' who are 'dependent upon government' and 'pay no income tax.' He noted: 'My job is not to worry about those people. I'll never convince them they should take personal responsibility and care for their lives.'" The video went viral and added the language of the 47 percent to the election lexicon.

This videotape summed up the deep, deep polarizations of the American political landscape today, a polarization that is, in fact, approximately 50-50.

Now, of course, the idea that Americans have always been 'one people' and suddenly we stopped is a myth, in fact itself a big lie. For nearly the first century of the democracy, we were legally a slave society and after that a nation of racial discrimination codified in laws called "Jim Crow," as documented in an excellent PBS series, "The Rise and Fall of Jim Crow."

In the 2012 election, a host of voter disenfranchisement legislation enacted at the state level in the 2012 election season is bringing back the era of "Jim Crow." It is an effort to deliberately create barriers for racial ethnic minorities and younger voters to able to legally vote.

Women were not part of "one people" until the passage of the 19th amendment in 1919 gave them the right to vote . The "Equal Rights Amendment " that would have prohibited unequal treatment under the law "on account of sex," was not ratified, so it can be argued that women are still not fully part of one people. Lesbian, gay, bi-sexual and transgender Americans are legally discriminated against today despite the language of the 14th Amendment that guarantees "equal protection under the law." Equal unless you are gay, that is.

The language of the 47 percent captures some of this broader American fragmentation in a better way than the 1 percent versus the 99 percent.

But beyond these specific divisions, a broader gulf is opening. It is the "makers versus the takers" ideology that reveals a morally untenable split in the nation.

In this emerging view, there can be no "war on poverty" argument where the idea is taking hold that those who are in need, who are elderly or very young, who are disabled, out-of-work or underemployed, or who are discriminated against deserve their unequal treatment. These "victims" deserve their victimization and unless help is denied to them they will not "take personal responsibility and care for their lives."

In this perverse view, "helping the poor" will only harm them.

In my Christian faith, however, Jesus teaches that in caring for the hungry, the thirsty, the stranger, the sick and the prisoner you "did it to me," that is, to Jesus himself. (Matthew 25:41) And when you fail to care for these, the poor, the sick, the suffering, you will be judged and condemned. (Matthew 25: 45-46)

It is a perversion of the Christian faith to argue that the "poor" deserve their fate and helping them is immoral. That is deeply, even profoundly, morally perverse.

Theology Matters:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ada Maria Isasi-Diaz , a significant Hispanic woman theologian, would frequently say, “La vida es la lucha.” Life is struggle.

This is the basis of the theological interpretation I bring to Election 2012. My Christian faith teaches me that history is a struggle between good and bad, between selfishness and generosity, between cruelty and compassion, and thus between right and wrong. I think an uncritical equivalence, whether political or theological, hides this struggle.

You have to choose.

Said no. She was terribly flattered, etc., but she's one year into a 5-year commitment as dean at Univ of Michigan, just moved her family back from DC to Michigan and regrets that this is the wrong time to take on something like this.

I didn't let her say no during the first call, but after consulting with her husband and thinking about it, she called back. She, of course, would like to be helpful from where she is, etc.

John, I don't how you want to go back to him on things like this. I don't think there is another candidate of color who folks would be comfortable putting up as Chair, though either Ceci or Peter (as a stretch) could be a Member.

LCV ACTION FUND

John,

Wow!

Clearly, everyone thinks Rep. Martin Heinrich would make a great U.S. senator from New Mexico.

So far, LCV Action Fund has raised $31,970 in contributions for Martin Heinrich for Senate. Every contribution was from an LCV supporter like you. That's a great start for a candidate so early in an election cycle.

But, it's just a start. Martin needs more if he has any hope of winning this seat. There's no doubt that corporate special interests will target this seat -- and their attacks will be relentless. With their cronies in Washington leading the charge, we can expect wave after wave of lies and misinformation to hit Martin over the coming weeks and months.

The LCV Action Fund campaign team ran the numbers this morning and if we can get another 223 people to step up and make a gift to Martin's campaign, we'll make our $45,000 goal by June 30.

Need a reason to give right now? Here's one: Martin Heinrich is the only Senate candidate in a competitive race with a perfect 100 percent LCV lifetime score.

You read that right -- 100 percent. Do you know what one of his declared opponents, former Rep. Heather Wilson scored? A lousy 15 percent.

We know we can reach our goal -- we have the momentum. Donations from across the country are pouring into LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen site for Martin's campaign. Will you help us reach our goal by June 30? A gift of just $500.00 today would really help.

DEADLINE June 30

John-- Rep. Martin Heinrich is one of the strongest environmental champions in Congress today.

Will you make a gift to Martin's campaign via LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen site today?

DONATE

Martin has been a leader on the most critical environmental issues facing our country. He is a proud member of the Sustainable Energy and Environment Coalition and he has steadfastly defended the EPA's ability to protect public health and hold polluters accountable under the Clean Air Act. He has also worked to protect New Mexico's abundant natural resources and public lands as an active member on the House Committee on Natural Resources.

There's a real urgency to your donation. We can't let the attacks against Martin go unanswered for a single minute. With your donation and donations from hundreds of other committed environmentalists like you, we can give Martin the resources he needs to answer these attacks NOW. Not two days, two weeks, or two months from now. He can take them on RIGHT NOW.

The June 30 end of quarter fundraising deadline is fast approaching, and we need just 223 more gifts to reach our goal for Martin. Can I count on you to chip in with a gift of $500.00 to Martin's campaign right now?

Thanks for supporting Martin Heinrich for Senate and LCV Action Fund.

Subject: Secretary Clinton's Foundation Work Update

Hi all-
Secretary Clinton, along with President and Chelsea Clinton and the broader Clinton Global Initiative community, just wrapped up a full and exciting week with the 10th CGI Annual Meeting. After 10 years, the quality of commitments as well as the network of individuals, organizations, business and governments have only grown stronger. There were many highlights –not least of which was President Clinton connecting with outer space (seen HERE)-- and I wanted to share a few with you from Secretary Clinton's three program areas.

Too Small to Fail

On Wednesday, Secretary Clinton participated in a CNN broadcast session entitled, The Science of Success: Investing in Babies' Minds. Dr. Sanjay Gupta moderated the discussion with Too Small To Fail advisory council member Cindy McCain, Geoffrey Canada from the Harlem Children's Zone, Dr. Nadine Burke Harris from the Center for Youth Wellness and Dr. Rosemarie Truglio from Sesame Workshop. The conversation focused on the early years as a critical time to build babies' brains and lay the foundation for future health and learning. The panelists discussed the powerful role that parents and communities play and highlighted Too Small to Fail's work in promoting early brain development. The session will air on CNN's "Sanjay Gupta MD" tomorrow at 4:30pm ET and Sunday at 7:30am ET.

No Ceilings: The Full Participation Project

In a conversation moderated by David Leonhardt of the New York Times, Secretary Clinton and Melinda Gates discussed why they joined forces on No Ceilings to address the critical importance of data in charting the path forward for women's full participation. You can watch a video they showed HERE , previewing some of the No Ceilings data, and you can read a Wired story HERE .

Joined by former Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard, Secretary Clinton announced CHARGE – the Collaborative for Harnessing Ambition and Resources for Girls' Education – a commitment by No Ceilings and the Center on Universal Education at the Brookings Institution bringing together 30 cross-sector partners to reach 14 million girls over 5 years. The collaborative, which committed over $600 million towards the effort, will focus on key areas to help close the gender gap in secondary education. You can read more about the announcement in The Atlantic HERE and TIME HERE .

Additionally, Chelsea Clinton announced a new commitment by GSMA and its partners to study the barriers to women's access to mobile technology. With this information, the partners commit to launch initiatives that will equip women in low and middle income communities with the tools to access health, education, economic, and other critical services through to mobile devices.

Job One

On Monday, Secretary Clinton hosted a CGI Executive Roundtable session with nearly 20 CEOs and global economic leaders focused on how to create new solutions to the global youth employment challenge. The conversation addressed both the challenges business face in recruiting and training youth and potential private-sector-led solutions to improve the participation of underserved youth in the global economy.

On Tuesday, representatives from sixteen businesses and nonprofit organizations participated in the first CGI Action Network on U.S. Youth Employment focused on ways the Clinton Foundation can support existing and cultivate new Job One commitment makers. In addition, partners including Year Up and the Ad Council premiered the first-ever PSA campaign encouraging employers to create career pathways for out-of-school, out-of-work youth. You can watch Secretary Clinton lending her support to this effort HERE and the PSA HERE . You can also read more about the effort in Fortune HERE .

Also on Tuesday, Secretary Clinton announced three additional Job One commitments:

- Dermalogica , a global skin care company, launched its first U.S. program focused on training unemployed young women for careers in the high-paid salon industry.
- North America's Building Trades committed to launch a new pre-apprenticeship program in the Washington, D.C. region to provide unemployed youth between the ages of 18 and 24 the opportunity to enter the skilled construction industry.

- Barrick Gold , the mining company, announced a multi-faceted effort to create a local talent base in the Western Shoshonne tribal communities of Nevada through investments in vocational education, internships and mentoring.

Finally, building on last year's success in an area that holds personal meaning for both of them, Secretary Clinton and Chelsea brought together heads of state from across Africa, as well as leaders from Asia and a wide range of conservation organizations, to take action against elephant poaching and illegal ivory trafficking. The broad coalition committed to step up efforts to "stop the killing, stop the trafficking, and stop the demand."

After Boko Haram: Hillary Clinton Promises Education For 14 Million Girls (Time)
By Eliana Dockterman
September 24, 2014
Time

Clinton and former Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard announced $600 million in private and public funding for global education

On Wednesday morning, Hillary Clinton and Former Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard announced a new Clinton Global Initiative commitment with the Center on Universal Education at the Brookings Institution for girls' education called CHARGE (The Collaborative for Harnessing Ambition and Resources for Girls Education). The initiative will include 30 other partners, including governments like the United States and organizations from the private sector, committing $600 million to reach 14 million girls around the world in the next five years.

"It's time to both celebrate the progress we've made and redouble our efforts," said Clinton at the announcement.

Gillard, a fellow at the Brookings Institution, approached Secretary Clinton and Chelsea Clinton a year ago to work together on the initiative. "I think across the world, as we talk about women in developing countries, there's been increasing recognition that empowering women and girls is a key change agent for development. There have been some truly shocking incidents that have caused us to have tears in our eyes and sharply intake our breath—what happened to Malala, what has happened with the Nigerian schoolgirls—that powerfully remind us that in some part of the world, getting an education is still a very dangerous thing for a girl," Gillard told TIME. "It's being targeted because it's powerful. Education is powerful, which is why some people want to stop it and why we should feel so passionate about assuring that it occurs."

Up until now, world leaders have focused on enrolling girls in primary school at the same rate as boys. And though the rate of female enrollment in primary school has risen from less than half to nearly 80% in the last 25 years, issues of quality and safety still persist. The Girls CHARGE initiative aims to address what they are calling a "second generation" of girls' issues especially in Sub-Saharan Africa and South West Asia. And while incidents like the kidnapping in Nigeria of more than 200 school girls by the radical group Boko Haram are extreme, they are emblematic of the harsh realities of educating girls in some parts of the world.

CHARGE has five main goals:

1. Keep girls in school

2. Ensure school safety and security

3. Improve quality of learning for girls

4. Support transitions from and out of school

5. Support girls' education leaders/workers in developing countries to fulfill these goals

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Partners of CHARGE are taking different steps in specific regions to reach these goals. The government of Nepal is committing $29 million to the cause and providing bicycles to girls to ensure girls can get to and from school. The BRAC organization is establishing 8,000 adolescent girl clubs in Bangladesh by 2019 to provide safe spaces for girls, among other efforts.

The Clinton Global Initiative and Brookings will evaluate the progress of the organizations towards their goals over the course of the next five years. Any government that wants to join the effort can.

Developing nations must work towards gender equality in education to improve their economy: Educated women add to family income by working, and their children are more likely to become educated themselves. But those girls most desperately in need live in countries where the governments don't want to cooperate with initiatives like this one. "That's obviously a huge challenge," Rachel Vogelstein of the Clinton Foundation's No Ceilings Initiative told TIME. "We're hoping to work with our partners and civil society organizations to cultivate leaders on a grassroots level in those locations."

But even as Clinton and Gillard look to empower women across the globe, they recognize that there are still equality gaps in the Western World as well. Both Gillard and Clinton have faced misogyny throughout their political careers. Gillard points out that women in countries like the United States and Australia cannot settle and must still fight for progress:

"My own perspective is that in many places around the world—Australia, here in the United States—after the big push of the second wave of feminism in our own nations, there was the assumption made that naturally gender change was happening and everything would equalize. I think in recent years there's been a realization that no, there are still problems in our own nations, including domestic violence, that require a dedicated focus and approach. The dialogue both in Australia and the United States must still include questions of political leadership, corporate leadership, civil society leadership where doors still need to be opened for women."

How to help America's most vulnerable jobseekers: Undereducated youth
By Claire Zillman
September 24, 2014
Fortune

A new campaign announced at the Clinton Global Initiative seeks to match corporations with young, unemployed Americans who lack a college degree. What are the chances it will work?
A few folks over at the Clinton Global Initiative have cooked up a plan to solve the problem of millions of young Americans who lack steady jobs or a college education: match them with corporations in need of entry-level talent.

The Ad Council, which produces public service advertisements, along with a coalition of mentoring and workplace training non-profits, rolled out a campaign called Grads of Life on Tuesday to help corporations fill the 4 million currently vacant positions in the U.S. with what the campaign calls "opportunity youths," 16 to 24-year olds who have not followed a traditional education path. There are an estimated 6 million "opportunity youths" in the U.S.

The campaign launched a series of public service announcements and an online platform aimed at introducing corporate America to this potential workforce. The platform also offers companies access to job preparation-related non-profits like Year Up, the Employment Pathways Project, MENTOR: The National Mentoring Partnership, and Opportunity Nation.

"Two-hundred and fifty of the Fortune 1000 companies are having trouble finding entry level talent," says Shawn Bohen, national director for strategic growth and impact for Year Up, an organization that provides workplace training and internships to urban youth. When it comes to hiring young Americans, corporations have been derailed by negative perceptions of Millennials and a reliance on hiring processes that are tailored toward applicants with four-year degrees, Bohen says. "Meanwhile the number of people not in the economy is growing on our watch. So we've gotten into this campaign to raise awareness on the employers' side about the success other employers are having [hiring opportunity youth]," she said.

Young Americans are among those who suffered most from the economic downturn. In the recession's wake, they have endured unemployment at a rate nearly twice as high as the nationwide average. Individuals age 16-24 experienced 18.1% unemployment in July 2011. The country as a whole, meanwhile, reported 9% joblessness at that time. In July 2014, youth unemployment had dropped to 14.3%, but that was still more than double the national rate of 6.2%. Those figures are especially alarming since research shows that workers who are unemployed as young adults earn lower wages for many years after their jobless stints. The Center for American Progress estimates that young Americans who were stuck in long-term unemployment during the recession will miss out on a collective $20 billion in potential earnings over the next 10 years.

The Grads of Life campaign specifically seeks to help young Americans who have dropped out of high school or college. Many of these Americans struggle to build an economic foundation for adult independence, putting a burden not just on the individual, but on taxpayers and society as a whole. Every year, each one of these opportunity youths—through lost taxes and higher government spending, mainly on the criminal justice system—costs taxes payers an estimated $13,890 a piece. Multiply that times 6 million and you have an $83 billion problem.

Nonprofits like Year Up have long been trying to address this issue. The 14-year old Boston-based organization uses community-based organizations, high schools, and religious organizations to identify young adults with high school diplomas or GEDs who are fit for its one-year program, which combines six months of workplace training in a classroom setting with six months of a professional internship at companies like AOL, Google, Facebook, LinkedIn, and American Express. Four months after the program ends, 85% of participants are employed at jobs that pays an average of $15 per hour, Bohen says. One year after the program's completion, the stats are about the same.

By participating in the Grads of Life campaign, nonprofits like Year Up get a chance to spread the word on a growing problem. That's certainly an admirable goal. The campaign "has put [its] finger on a real source of concern," says Gary Burtless, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution who researches labor market policy and unemployment. "But I'm not sure whether the best way to work on it is to round up employers [to fix the problem]."

It might work, he says, if something like 35% of the business community participates, including highly regarded companies. (The Grads of Life campaign says that The Gap, JPMorgan Chase, and Salesforce.com have created their own programs for hiring non-traditional candidates.) After all, that's how employer-sponsored health insurance spread. A few big companies implemented it as a way to get around the government's wage controls during World War II and it slowly trickled down to smaller businesses, becoming a standard benefit by the 1960s.

But Burtless is skeptical that non-traditional job training and hiring practices will catch on in a similar way because the United States, historically, has turned away from such programs. In the past, the U.S. relied on apprenticeships as a substitute path to employment for students who didn't flourish in typical education settings. But instead of spreading to white collar professions, apprenticeships "remained little islands of the economy in the construction and building trades," Burtless says. Institutions that offered worker training back in the 19th century, like what's now known as the Rochester Institute of Technology, eventually started offering four-year degrees. "They realized they weren't going to survive if they didn't call themselves colleges," Burtless says. The U.S. is now a nation that's "very suspicious of routes that don't end with a diploma."

It's not that way in other countries. Burtless pointed to apprentice systems in Germany, Austria, and Denmark that are mainstream, but that's largely thanks to post-World War II education system overhauls.
Government intervention at the federal level would go a long way toward getting such a system to stick in the United States, but because state and local governments directly oversee school systems, "our national government is very reluctant to intervene," Burtless says. And, as the Grads of Life program points out, that's to the detriment of young Americans who don't have access to—or don't succeed in—the traditional education system. "We don't do very well by those kids," Burtless says, "They need to make a living too."

Friend,

After a record number of people voted early, we're getting ready for a huge Election Day.

Polls are open Tuesday from 6:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.

You can look up your polling location right here.

This year, voters like you have the power to create real change by voting to raise the minimum wage, protect voting rights in Illinois, and re-elect a governor who's fighting for all of us.

Four years ago, the election was decided by just three votes per neighborhood -- and this time it could be even closer.

Make sure none of your friends and family stay home on Election Day.

Take a minute to confirm your polling place, and make a plan to vote tomorrow:

Team,

Attaching a draft HRC op-ed which uses opposition to KXL as a pivot to talk about a plan for broad investment in modernizing our energy infrastructure and forging a climate compact between the US, Mexico, and Canada. These versions reflect initial edits and comments from the policy team, JDP, and Nikki.

The current thinking is to have HRC address this in her meeting with the building trades on Wednesday and roll out the fact sheet and op-ed in conjunction with that. Please send edits and clearances from comms, policy, research, and political to me, Trevor, Ben, and Pete no later than 10 am tomorrow so we can get this to HRC with plenty of time for her review and clearance.

Thanks,

Kristina

Subject:	Celebrating the Magna Carta at 800

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

To celebrate the 800th anniversary of the 1215 Magna Carta, the Library of Congress has arranged to display one of only four surviving originals. During World War II, the United States kept this particular copy of the Magna Carta, which is ordinarily held in Lincoln Cathedral, in Fort Knox. It was returned to the UK at the close of the war. [Further details on the exhibit, below]

The Library of Congress has very kindly agreed to have one of its staff members lead two tours this coming Friday, December 5th, at 1:30 pm and at 2:30 pm for our faculty, staff, and students. What better way to celebrate the end of the term?!?! There are currently 14 slots available. If you would like to join us for the tour, please email Betsy Kuhn, at jek63@law.georgetown.edu.

In addition to supplementing the Magna Carta exhibit with a number of rare materials, the Library of Congress is currently hosting a wonderful exhibit on the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which is well worth the visit (as is the building generally, for anyone who has not had a chance to see it).

Again — please let Betsy know if you are interested in attending. It will be on a first-come, first-served basis, so we'll simply, as our faculty seminar leaders put it, “Keep a queue.”

Happy 800th anniversary!

Kind regards,

Laura

“Magna Carta: Muse and Mentor” Exhibition at Library of Congress to Open Nov. 6

1215 Magna Carta from England’s Lincoln Cathedral to be on Display

Magna Carta, the great charter of rights and liberties, stands at the heart of English and American law and has influenced the legal systems of many other democratic nations. One of the earliest statements of limited government and a point of departure for centuries of debate on individual rights, Magna Carta has become the world’s most enduring symbol of the rule of law.

The Library of Congress will celebrate the 800th anniversary of the first issue of Magna Carta with a 10-week exhibition "Magna Carta: Muse and Mentor," opening Thursday, Nov. 6, and running through Monday, Jan. 19, 2015. The exhibition—to be located in the South Gallery, second level of the Thomas Jefferson Building, 10 First St. S.E., Washington, D.C.—will be free and open to the public from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

The Lincoln King John 1215 Magna Carta, on loan from the Lincoln Cathedral in England, will be the centerpiece of the exhibition. In addition, there will be rare materials from the Law Library of Congress and from various other divisions of the Library, which will tell the story of 800 years of Magna Carta’s influence on the history of political liberty. The materials will both illuminate the context of Magna Carta in medieval and early modern England and show how the charter came to occupy such an important place in British and American law.

"Magna Carta: Muse and Mentor" also will celebrate the 75th anniversary of the Lincoln Magna Carta’s first visit to the Library of Congress. After a six-month exhibit in the British Pavilion at the 1939 New York World’s Fair, the document traveled to Washington, D.C. On Nov. 28, 1939, the British Ambassador to the United States, in an official ceremony, handed Magna Carta over to Librarian of Congress Archibald MacLeish for safekeeping during World War II. The Library placed the document on exhibition, until the U.S. entry into the war, when the Library sent Magna Carta to Fort Knox, Ky. The document returned to England in 1946.

Librarian of Congress James H. Billington said, "We are honored to place on exhibition Magna Carta, one of the lasting treasures of human history. The principles that underlay Magna Carta are the foundation of our liberties, inspiring this country’s Founding Fathers in shaping the U.S. Constitution and the laws of this land. We especially welcome the return of the Lincoln King John 1215 Magna Carta, because the Library of Congress played an important role in its safekeeping during World War II."

Law Librarian of Congress David Mao said, "Through this exhibition we will celebrate the core tradition of the rule of law. While aiming to detail the enduring impact of Magna Carta over 800 years, our exhibit will illuminate its influence on our legal traditions and political thought while examining the unfolding story of the rule of law throughout the world. We look forward to taking a leading role in the American commemoration of the 800th anniversary of this legal treasure."

The Lincoln King John Magna Carta will travel first to the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and then to the Sterling and Francine Clark

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Art Institute in Williamstown, Mass. Its final stop in America will be the Library of Congress.

After its appearance here, Magna Carta will return to England and be placed briefly on display at the British Library, along with the other three surviving original 1215 issues of the document. Two are held by the British Library and one by Salisbury Cathedral. Of the four, the Lincoln King John Magna Carta is considered to be in the best condition.

Magna Carta or "Great Charter" was sealed in 1215, in a grassy meadow at Runnymede, by the Thames, when barons coerced King John into granting a number of rights and liberties. The document is the world's most enduring symbol of the rule of law, establishing the principle that no one is above the law, not even the king.

The Library of Congress also will celebrate the 800th anniversary by curating and providing materials for a facsimile traveling exhibition on Magna Carta for the American Bar Association (ABA). The exhibition will open at a 2014 ABA Annual Meeting in Boston and travel across the United States. In June 2015, the ABA Magna Carta Facsimile Traveling Exhibit will journey to England. For more information on ABA's Magna Carta commemoration, visit www.facebook.com/abamagnacarta .

The Lincoln Cathedral, officially the Cathedral Church of St. Mary of Lincoln, is located in Lincoln, England, and is the seat of the Bishop of Lincoln in the Church of England. The cathedral and its bishops have had a leading role in the history of England. In 1215 the Bishop of Lincoln, Hugh of Wells, was present at Runnymede along with Lincolnshire's Cardinal Archbishop Stephen Langton. When King John agreed to the barons' demands, copies of Magna Carta, written in Latin, were made and distributed to sheriffs, cathedrals, and important religious houses throughout England. Lincoln Cathedral's Magna Carta is one of only four from the original distribution still in existence. The cathedral itself, highly regarded by architectural scholars, is one of Europe's finest Gothic buildings. Construction started in 1072 and continued in several phases throughout the medieval period.

The Law Library of Congress was established in 1832 with the mission to make its resources available to members of Congress, the Supreme Court, other branches of the U.S. government and the global legal community and to sustain and preserve a universal collection of law for future generations. With more than 5 million items in various formats, the Law Library of Congress contains the world's largest collection of law books and other resources from all countries and provides online databases and guides to legal information worldwide through its website at www.loc.gov/law .

The Library of Congress, the nation's oldest federal cultural institution and the largest library in the world, holds more than 158 million items in various languages, disciplines and formats. The Library serves the U.S. Congress and the nation both on-site in its reading rooms on Capitol Hill and through its award-winning website at www.loc.gov .

A Message from Bud Potter -

Dear Trustees:

I'm emailing you today on behalf of the Honorary Degrees Subcommittee to ask for your nominations for honorary degree recipients. Per the College's bylaws, honorary degrees are given to those who demonstrate "great distinction" in their field of expertise. Honorary degrees have commonly been given to those who have experience in the following areas:

--academic;
--the arts;
--business;
--law;
--the media;
--medicine;
--philanthropy;
--politics; or
--social activism.

If you have an individual whom you feel would make an excellent candidate for an honorary degree, please let Denise know (dbailey@knox.edu) by the end of October. We encourage you to consider the potential for a longer-term relationship between the nominees and the College and if such potential exists to include that in their nomination. For nominations, please include the person's name, contact information (if known), any relationship you or others at the College may have with that individual, and a brief statement indicating why this person of distinction is worthy of a Knox honorary degree. Please include a link if there is online information about the candidate.

Thanks, and I look forward to seeing many of you next week at Knox.

Bud

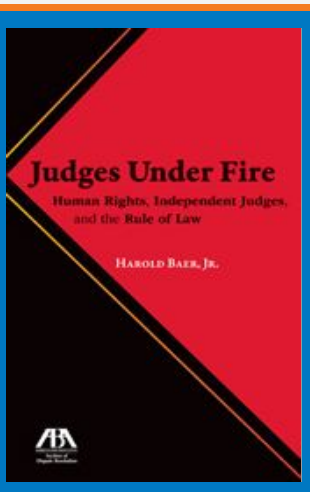
Judges Under Fire:

Human Rights, Independent Judges, and the Rule of Law

From the ABA Section of Dispute Resolution



A compilation of inspiring and true stories on the importance of an independent judiciary and the rule of law.

Judges Under Fire: Human Rights, Independent Judges, and the Rule of Law

This inspiring and persuasive collection of true stories seeks to illustrate what can happen when the judiciary is stripped of its independence and prevented from following the rule of law. While it provides some lessons from foreign nations where the rule of law has been sublimated to opportunistic leaders, it also provides a chilling reminder that it can happen here.

The author includes compelling, real stories on:

- Judicial Independence and the American Colonies
- The People's Court in Nazi Germany
- Bench and Bar in the People's Republic of China.
- Destabilized Pakistan's Independent Judiciary
- A Serbian Judge Fights for the Rule of Law
- U.S. v. Bayless--A Home-Grown Challenge in the Rule of Law
- The Face of an Independent Judiciary
- And much more!

Subject:	immig policy position in WH

John: as you think about WH organization, I would urge you to think about a position on immigration and labor--perhaps on the DPC. There is currently a double lack of coordination in the Executive Branch on these issues: (1) DHS, DOJ, HHS, Labor all have pieces, and (2) within DHS (since INS was broken up and tossed into various parts of DHS), there is only weak coordination.

The long term fix is probably a new federal agency that collects the pieces from the departments and establishes a coherent policy process; but until that time the issues need high level and coordinated attention at the WH level.

Hi John.

I hope you're well. Nice piece in the Times about you today. Following up from our conversation at Christmas, I'm checking in to see if you might have a few minutes now that you've wound things up at the WH. If getting together for a quick conversation would be helpful I'd be happy to meet for coffee.

In the meantime, I'm hoping you may be able to help me find out more about an initiative Sheila Nix brought to my attention. After a meeting with her in January she introduced me to Tina Tchen & Jennifer Simon via email and recommended we talk about roles leading a new international girls education program led or supported by Mrs Obama's office. I gathered it was intended to be launched in March, but I haven't yet heard anything further. If you know Tina & Jennifer and would be willing to forward my attached resume to them to prompt their attention I would be grateful.

Many thanks, and please let me know if you'd like to get together for a brief chat.

Best,
Kara

The skit was fine but not a home run. We had lots of issues with the development of it today. Her interview was the best part of the show. She's getting really good at this format - she's relaxed, confident, works in message and has fun.

John,

Congresswoman Nan Hayworth is the Worst. Republican. Ever. You know it. I know it. Now, we have to make sure everyone else knows it.

And thanks to a new contest from the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, you can help me do just that.

Click here to vote for Congresswoman Hayworth in the DCCC's "Worst. Republican. Ever." competition, which will help us earn the critical national support we need to win this race.

Over and over again, Congresswoman Hayworth has turned her back on women in her district by burying her head in the sand as colleague after colleague - from her very own staff to Tea Party Congressmen - unleashed vile, anti-woman attacks.

When her spokesman advocated "hurling acid" at female Democratic Senators for supporting the Lily Ledbetter Fair Pay Act? Silence from Congresswoman Hayworth.

When I called on the Congresswoman to condemn her fellow Tea Partier Todd Akin's assertion that "legitimate rape" rarely causes pregnancy? Congresswoman Hayworth refused to call for his resignation.

When, just last week, I urged Congresswoman Hayworth to reject Tea Party Congressman Tim Huelskamp's inflammatory remarks that Planned Parenthood is a "racist" organization that was created with the sole purpose of killing minority children? You guessed it: silence.

And then of course there's Congresswoman Hayworth's disgraceful, anti-woman votes: defunding Planned Parenthood, opposing birth control coverage, and supporting a law that could force rape victims to send their medical records to the IRS.

Click here right away to go on record that you've had enough of Congresswoman Hayworth's terrible record for women, and that she is the "Worst. Republican. Ever."

Thank you for all that you do. With your support, we'll defeat the "Worst. Republican. Ever." this November.

We're specifically wondering about her lunch companions and if she traveled on an official campaign bus or other vehicle.

Almost every message being projected outward from her campaign is negative, and a candidate with high distrust ratings should not be doing this, and my phone has been ringing and my email box has been full with Democrats who like me who support her but who, like me, are appalled and losing confidence.

I have never seen anything like this.

This campaign is devoid of positive messages, uplifting appeal, and coherent rationale.

And bluntly, it is getting to the point where every word she utters, there are more young people and first time participants in politics who support Bernie who would not support her in a general election no matter how hard I and others try to persuade them.....and whoever persuaded her that running for Obama's third term is the way to win a general election is far removed from American politics in 2016, and if they think she can constantly shift her position they do not understand the depth of distrust of her and the damage it does....
and they do not understand in the modern communications environment she cannot be a centrist one day and a liberal the next day because images and impressions are formed and locked in far earlier than in the 1970's to 1990's.

This is a campaign that has never had a compelling rationale and now has lost its way into a sea of negativity.....the way for her to be elected is to solve the first problem, and develop some uplifting reason for voters to support her, and not to create a second problem, running a negative campaign without a positive message and vision.....

8 point programs, no matter how worthy, do not create a purpose or a rationale or an inspiration.....negative politics from a candidate with high negative ratings attacking a candidate with positive high ratings is the political road to hell.

I strongly suspect she has been sold a bill of goods from Obama consultants who became Hillary consultants, but whoever is the cause, and whatever is the motive, something is horribly and terribly wrong with this campaign.....and when Dan Pfeiffer says on CNN that this is not a change election he has his head nine feet up his ass.....this is a change election, dammit, and Hillary Clinton is running as the candidate of the status quo and that is the worst possible place to be.....and her sycophantic adoration of Obamacare is absurd and totally out of touch with the reality of general election politics....

This campaign is in very, very big trouble and I see zero evidence that Hillary Clinton either understands this, or understands why....

I hope others are being as candid with you, and the Clintons, as I am. I assure you my view expressed here is very widely shared among people who consider themselves her friends.....Brent

Washington MONTHLY

Weekly Wrap-up

July 31st, 2015

The Best of Political Animal

- Jeb Bush has a serious Planned Parenthood problem. Read it.
- We've reached a phase of political history where the GOP in Washington cannot insist on having its way without risking or executing a government shutdown. Read it.
- The Republican idea of Medicaid being "worthless" is closely correlated with the idea of the lives of poor folks being relatively "worthless." Read it.
- Estimates of the cost of mass deportation of the undocumented start at about $265 billion and range on up from there. But don't tell that to Donald Trump. Read it.

The Myth of Mobility

Surveys find that nearly two-thirds of Americans believe it's "still possible to start out poor in this country, work hard and become rich." But is it really true? A new study finds that the best way to get ahead is to be born there. Read it.

The Big Financial Problem With Income-Based Repayment

If you graduate from college with $70,000 worth of loans, get a job that pays only $25,000 a year, and sign up for income-based repayment, you're never going to pay the federal government $70,000 in 20 years, even if you get standard annual raises. Read it.

As NPR's Cory Turner Shows, The Smallest Details Make The Biggest Impressions

Sometimes the key to making an education story really stand out is finding and highlighting a key detail that's so memorable and unique that it's hard to forget. Extra points if it's a dramatic visual or sound. Read it.

Of Course, Trump Will Never Win...

Trump's popularity is a logical conclusion of a sequence of decisions that the right has made over the last several decades to delegitimize our core institutions. Read it.

Rand Paul: Running for Office Requires Running an Office

Does the Kentucky senator understand that the soft power exerted by those who are able to harness and deliver good front offices - effective chiefs of staff, energetic campaign finance operators, well-connected media consultants, savvy pollsters, etc. may rival or exceed that of simple monetary donations? Read it.

Here's How They Should Do the Debates

We can't learn anything in presidential debates if the candidates don't have any time to respond to questions. Here's a better way of doing it. Read it.

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/07/14/mccain-aide-calls-for-ful_n_112598.html

Appearing on Meet the Press Sunday, John McCain's senior adviser Carly Fiorina touted the Senator's bona fides on education by laying out the reforms he had envisioned for the No Child Left Behind act.

"He believes that No Child Left Behind was an imperfect piece of legislation," she said . "Nevertheless, there are things about it that have worked. We need to learn the lessons, fix the problems, fully fund it, and continue to focus on the education of our children as well as the education and training of our displaced workers."

But if full funding for NCLB is what Fiorina is looking for, she can start by lecturing her current boss. Despite hailing the legislation as a major milestone, McCain has consistently (though not always) voted against providing complete funding for the education legislation. According to the National Education Association , "Since 2003, McCain voted repeatedly against fully funding No Child Left Behind, resulting in an unfunded mandate that has continued to further tap local communities and states during an economic downturn."

The lost-in-the-news-cycle gaffe for Fiorina puts a exclamation point on what was, undoubtedly, a tough week. First she touted health insurance plans that covered birth control in addition to Viagra, leading to a completely awkward exchange for her boss with a reporter (not to mention the embarrassing revelation that in 2003, McCain had voted against an amendment requiring insurance coverage of prescription birth control).

Then she mentioned, in an interview with Bloomberg's Al Hunt, that McCain would be open to raising taxes on the wealthy, if in a creative enough fashion - a position sure to incur the wrath of anti-tax conservatives.

Subject:	Time-Sensitive Benefit Reminders

Dear Colleagues:

I have just a few reminders for you as we approach the end of 2014.

Confirm your 2015 Benefit Elections
First, Open Enrollment for your 2015 benefits has concluded, however, if you need to make corrections or adjustments to the elections you made in GMS, you may do so by completing an Enrollment Correction form . You have until Monday, December 15 at 5 p.m. to submit this form to our office by fax (202) 687-2389 or in person (ground floor, Healy Hall). If you need help reviewing your 2015 benefit elections in GMS, you can find step-by-step instructions here .

Flexible Spending Accounts
Second, it's important to remember that Flexible Spending Account elections do not automatically roll over from year to year. If you intended to participate in an FSA during 2015 but did not make the election in GMS during Open Enrollment, please complete an Enrollment Correction form and indicate the amount you'd like set aside for the year. For 2015, the maximum contribution for Health Care FSAs is $2,550 and for Dependent Daycare FSAs is $5,000 (per household).

Tuition Assistance Program Deadlines
I've received some questions regarding last week's email outlining the TAP application submission deadline for Spring. Yes, in order to guarantee timely processing of TAP applications in light of the upcoming winter break, we ask that you submit your applications and supporting documentation by this Friday, December 5. However, we do recognize that this may not be possible in all cases, particularly with outside (non-GU) schools. Please submit your information as soon as you get it.

I hope that you enjoy this festive and full time of year. As always, it's our pleasure and honor to serve the faculty and staff who make Georgetown University such a wonderful place to work and learn.

Be well,

Charles DeSantis

Hey John,

Just wanted to flag this for you separately – this is an issue that is incredibly important to me, and to the firm, and I hope it's given some attention. Green Dot is a non-profit client, whose work we know and support deeply. Noah sat on the board for many years after the organization was founded by Steve Barr in 1999 (more below). In the context of all the anti-charter comments made recently it's really important that this point of view is also heard and understood.

Can you make sure this letter is processed? Much appreciated, and I hope all is well with you!

Best,
Hannah

Green Dot Public Schools' History

Green Dot Public Schools was founded in 1999 in direct response to the poor state of public high schools in the Los Angeles area. Los Angeles Unified School District's (LAUSD's) high schools were not graduating over 50% of their students, and those that were making it through were rarely prepared for college. The vast majority of the students failing out of the system were children from low-income families. Green Dot had a vision of creating small, successful charter schools and in doing so, demonstrating to the school district and the public-at-large that there was a more effective way to provide public education to low-income, high-risk youth.

In August 2000, Green Dot opened its doors with just one 9th grade class of 140 students. Today, our organization has successfully grown to serve more than 10,000 students in communities across Los Angeles.

Hi Maya, Ann, Jake, John:

Hope you're all doing well, I'm sure this week has been nothing short of intense for your team. I thought Secretary Clinton's speech at the Council on Foreign Relations yesterday was excellent, due in no small part to all of your efforts, I'm sure. She is clearly our next Commander in Chief, and the only one qualified to manage this complicated and dangerous world we exist in.

I'm reaching out today on behalf of Green Dot Public Schools , in response to comments made throughout the week regarding charter schools. Green Dot is a non-profit public school organization headquartered and founded in Los Angeles, whose teachers are unionized and whose schools accept the entire attendance boundary of students, including students with disabilities. As you can read in detail in the attached letter from Green Dot CEO Marco Petruzzi, Green Dot is a model for schools everywhere and is committed to transforming public education for ALL students. They do successful school turnarounds of the most severely failing schools better than anyone in the country. Their story and example is an important voice in the debate about charter schools, and I hope you will read and share this information with Secretary Clinton.

Green Dot would welcome a school visit from someone on the campaign at one of their schools in Los Angeles, Memphis, or Tacoma, and I'd be happy to arrange a conference call with Marco to answer any questions about further details on this complicated policy issue.

Thank you for taking the time to read this email and attached letter, and thank you for all you are doing to elect our next President Clinton. I'm proud to be on this journey with you.

Best,
Hannah

Funding source for anti-Boswell ads questioned by liberal group

BLOG POST BY WILLIAM PETROSKI • BPETROSK@DMREG.COM • OCTOBER 7, 2010

Plans by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to spend $183,000 in an effort to unseat U.S. Rep. Leonard Boswell, an Iowa Democrat, are being questioned by a liberal advocacy group asking if foreign money is involved.

Americans United for Change, based in Washington, D.C., on Thursday cited a report issued this week by the Center for American Progress. The report alleges the Chamber is receiving “dues” payments of tens of thousands of dollars from foreign companies in countries such as Bahrain, India and Egypt, and then mingling the money with campaign funds.

Americans United says the chamber plans to spend more than $75 million before the November election and it has already run 8,000 ads, most of which support Republican candidates. In Boswell’s race in Iowa’s 3rd Congressional District, a Federal Election Commission report filed Wednesday shows the Chamber plans to spend $183,000 in an effort to defeat him.

Tita Freeman, vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said Thursday the allegations are “unfounded, deceitful and completely erroneous.” The Chamber “fully complies with all applicable laws and regulations. No foreign money is used to fund poltical activities,” she said.

Of the U.S. Chamber’s 300,000 members, a relative handful are non-U.S. based companies, Freeman said. She called the allegations a “desperate attempt to silence those who support free enterprise.”

Americans United issued a statement asking Republican Brad Zaun, Boswell’s opponent, to repudiate the Chamber’s advertising campaign. Boswell’s campaign manager, Grant Woodard, echoed the criticism, saying the Chamber “is a well-known advocate of shipping American jobs overseas.”

Timothy Maloney, Zaun’s campaign manager, dismissed the criticism, saying Boswell has “apparently forgotten that huge out-of-state labor unions and special interests have pumped several hundred thousand dollars into his race. Now, when someone tries to get him to accept some personal responsibility for his voting record, he cries foul.

MEMO: Does Brad Zaun Repudiate or Welcome the Likely Foreign Money Polluting Iowa’s Airwaves on His Behalf?

DATE: October 7, 2010

TO: Interested Parties

FROM: Americans United for Change

A disturbing new report is raising serious questions about whether the powerful U.S. Chamber of Commerce is actively soliciting and spending untold sums of money from foreign countries to influence U.S. elections – money from countries including China, Egypt, and Saudi Arabia that is likely being used to pollute the airwaves in Iowa as we speak.

From the Oct. 5 New York Times editorial, “Clean and Open American Elections” :

> For at least 44 years, it has been illegal for foreign corporations, countries and individuals to make political contributions in the United States for any election, either directly or indirectly. It is even against the law to solicit > such contributions. But in this Wild West year of political money, that longstanding ban is being set aside. The United States Chamber of Commerce — one of the biggest advertisers in midterm races around the country — is actively soliciting foreign money, and government enforcers seem to be doing nothing to stop it.

> According to a report issued Tuesday by the Center for American Progress, a liberal policy group in Washington, the chamber is getting "dues" payments of tens of thousands of dollars from foreign companies in countries such as Bahrain, India and Egypt, and then mingling the money with its fund to advocate for or against candidates in the midterm races …The chamber has vowed to spend more than $75 million before the November election, and it has already run 8,000 ads, most of which support Republican candidates.

It's reported today that Congressman Leonard Boswell (IA-3) is one of the targets of the U.S. Chamber's $75 million, likely foreign-funded television smear campaign. Why?

As CAP Action Fund/ThinkProgress notes in the report, "The Chamber has repeatedly sent out issue alerts attacking Democratic efforts to encourage businesses to hire locally rather than outsource to foreign counties."

Congressman Boswell is top target of the Corporate special interests because he has fought hard to create jobs here at home by closing tax loopholes, embraced by the U.S. Chamber, that reward companies that American ship jobs overseas. The Chamber is clearly willing to do whatever it takes to replace Representatives like Leonard Boswell who put middle-class families ahead of Corporate America's bottom line.

The question is: does Brad Zaun welcome these ads attacking Congressman Boswell on his behalf that aren't just from out-of-state, but likely from out-of-country? Will he repudiate this wholly Un-American, Un-Democratic, and possibly illegal foreign intrusion into Iowa's political process?

For Brad Zaun to look the other way and say nothing as more and more foreign money likely pours into Iowa on his behalf would be tantamount to an endorsement of it. His silence would send a clear message to the U.S. Chamber: "Keep it up, boys – keep it up."

The numbers are daunting: Our most critical budget deadline of the election is tomorrow, and we're still coming up $4,216 short of our goal.

John, there is no time to lose. We need 208 donations to close the gap.

If we can hit our goal, it'll be a BRAND NEW RECORD for Ann -- but if we fall short, it'll be a heartbreaking loss for our Arizona campaign.

24 hours to go -- are you in?

ELIZABETH ECHOLS DEMOCRAT FOR ASSEMBLY

John --

Every candidate for state office in California talks about education. But you may not know that throughout my career, I've been focused on providing opportunity for all to high quality education.

I'm honored to have gained the support of a who's who of California educators, including the California Federation of Teachers, California School Employees Association, the Berkeley Federation of Teachers, and others.

And this week, I am pleased to announce the endorsements of the California Faculty Association and the Faculty Association of California Community Colleges.

Is education at the top of your priority list? If so, I hope you'll not just vote for me but will also contribute to my campaign here.

Joshua Pechthalt, President of the California Federation of Teachers, supports me because "Elizabeth will work for better classrooms, greater access to higher education and training." And Lillian Taiz, President of the California Faculty Association, says that "Elizabeth Echols will work with us to restore full funding to our state's universities and colleges. She will be an effective voice for lowering student fees and making our state universities affordable for our students."

Quality education is the key to a robust economy. To me, the two issues are inseparable. I served as the CEO of OpNet, a nationally recognized nonprofit that trained low-income young adults for jobs in technology. Under my leadership, 80% of OpNet's graduates received good-quality jobs in the tech industry. I also helped build after school programs to interest more girls and underserved students in math and science.

In the State Assembly, I will:

- Fight to increase funding for our K-12 schools, so we get back on track after years of devastating cuts.

- Prioritize our higher education system, lowering fees while ensuring our students can get the classes they need to graduate.

- Invest in universal early childhood education to close the achievement gap in our schools.

To win next Tuesday's primary election, I need to deliver this message to voters and respond to the bald-faced lies one of my opponents has been spreading about me. That means money. I'm getting closer to my goal of $25,000 raised by the Election—and a generous contribution from you can help put us over the top.

Any amount—$50, $100, $250, $500, or more—will get me closer to my goal.

To contribute, please go here .

Thank you so much for your continuing support! Your help means a lot to me.

With gratitude,

P.S. You can donate online here , but if you prefer to send a check, please make it out to Elizabeth Echols for State Assembly and mail it to me at 2342 Shattuck Avenue #147, Berkeley, CA 94704. Was asked about emails, said while he wasn't going to expand that he trusts Sen. Feinstein on this stuff. He was otherwise asked how he feel (good), what HRC needs to do to win (more of what she did tonight), will she win (I hope so, we're leaving it all on the floor).

Will circulate a transcript once I have it.

Color | New | Flags

No fun facts, sorry.

Remarks

A pretty fired up WJC started by saying we need a President who can restore broad based prosperity - who can take everyone along for the ride. Someone who can protect our rights, keep us safe and strong. Someone who is smart and strong, and can make good things happen.

Talked about courting HRC and learning how much of a change maker she's been, her entire life.

Used his bit about good days, bad day and other days.

Talked about HRC growing up with a Republican father and a Liberal mother. Joked that she stuck with her mom's ideals, but kept her dad's hard head.

Talked about HRC seeing MLK.

And close by making a lot of the biographical points he's been making.

Easy breezy.

Created some contrast with Sanders:

Said congress won't pass free education. And used some of the same language from earlier today.

WJC just said that it's fine to say you're for a single payer system. He acknowledged that if we didn't have something to build on, maybe it's what we should be doing. But, that we can't afford to rip away the progress we've made - that we need to build on what we have.

He made the same Wall St. argument/contrast he did earlier today. He also used the bit on Bernie calling Planned Parenthood on others the establishment. Adlibbed a bit this time saying that just because people aren't for sure doesn't mean that they're the establishment.

Said people who can afford to pay for their children's education (i.e.: him) should not get it for free. That everyone should contribute their fair share. That it'd unfair to take away money from those who need it.

Said the 90's were good, but that we need to upgrade that to get similar results in new and challenging times.

Fun fact: As it turns out, and per WJC, watermelons aren't very good when they're north of 40 lbs - because they're mostly water. He offered as much after reminding the crowd here that the world record for watermelons stood at some 270 lbs, at one point. And, that it was grown in AR while he was Governor.

Remarks

About 350 more Iowans showed up to see WJC here in Muscatine.

The field organizer (Fernando) that introduced WJC was pretty good.

WJC shared a fun little story about watermelons & acknowledged that delicious wine is made in Muscatine.

Piggybacking off of what Fernando said during his intro, WJC started by talking CHIP and health care.

He transitioned and shared a couple of the stories of the folks he's met while out here.

He then spent some time framing the election and laying out what's at stake. Covered college affordability, ISIS, immigration, trickle down economics (we did it before, we can do it again), community-police relations, voting rights, and gun safety.

Had some fun with the GOP, saying they "name and blame." Used his cold/Obama line. And said they've now resorted to blame HRC.

He created some contrast with Bernie. (Insert language above).

Said the GOP would blame Obama if the sun didn't come up in the AM.

Said that in comparison to the GOP, Democrats occupy the real world when they debate.

Even though he never mentioned him by name, he took a couple of jabs at Bernie:

Summarized Bernie's closing argument as follows: "yeah, I'll break up the big banks, tax millionaires and billionaires, and give you free education." Called Bernie's argument pretty catchy. But, said we need real answers to real problems. That it may not be emotionally satisfying, but that it's the truth. And went on to articulate HRC's colleague affordability plan.

Said her opponent's health care plan is fairly new, that it was released a couple of days ago - ahead of the last debate. He then articulated HRC's plan and made the practical argument. Closed by saying that we need to "focus the power of the presidency to further improve the ACA."

Tackled Bernie's establishment comment as well. Argued forcefully that NOT Planned Parenthood, NOR the progressive papers, NOR any of the people who work on progressive issues, OR the progressive newspapers in IA and NH that have endorsed her are part of the establishment.

Said that he and Obama are the only two Presidents since Eisenhower to have Republican Sec.'s of Defense.

Said America's approval rating went up 20 percent while she was SoS.

Remarks

350 deep here in Fairfield.

WJC was fired up

Said he saw the strength and diversity of America yesterday while traveling throw IA. He shared the stories of some of the folks he's met since being here, covering the issues of health care, prescription drug abuse, and immigration. Said he was telling these stories because the election was about them (the people).

He then dove into articulating what's at stake these elections.

Said most folks are angry because change hasn't caught up to them yet.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Said it isn't close. HRC's the best change-maker.

(Insert all of the Bernie language).

Covered the economy and said we need to recapture the American Dream. Brought out his charts, compared and contrasted his performance with Reagan's, and said only one person can get us back on track.

Covered ISIS, Muslims, and the GOP's fear-mongering.

Said the doesn't want to run against her, so they're constantly attacking her. And, went on to offer all of the biographical points he's been making.

Closed with his bit on Flint.

Remarks were good. WJC was rapid firing. Stuck to his usual construct and was forceful about why he thinks she's the best change-maker he's ever met.

the future. Said we need to finish the recovery started under Obama and that we need to bring back the middle class.

Said we can do it because we've done it before. (pulled out his charts and gave Reagan the business).

Said we shouldn't turn our backs on important issues or turn Muslims into demons. That we should be doing this together.

Covered BLM, immigration, prescription and heroin drub abuse, dark money in politics, and voting rights.

Said that while it's important not to let the GOP not to rip away all the progress we've made, we need to work together - that we need more friends and fewer enemies.

He then moved on to the issue of guns, which he fleshed out a little bit. And then ISIS. And the frustration folks are feeling.

After he made the turn, he spent a significant chunk of time on all of the good things HRC has made happen - as a private citizen, as a Sen., and as SoS.

Covered health care.

And, the sanction on Iran. He praised HRC's effort profusely and suggested that both Obama and Kerry have acknowledged how important they've been.

WJC was pretty fired up here in Washington, where WJC addressed 300 people, which I'm told is a pretty decent-sized crowd.

He started by arguing that we can't afford not to elect HRC, because she would lead with more friends and fewer enemies.

Talked about HRC's toughness, using the 11-hour Benghazi hearing as an example.

Forcefully pointed out that she's the only candidate to have gone to Wall St. to warn that if they didn't cut it out with home mortgage securities that they'd drive the economy into a ditch.

Pointed out the HRC's best friend from Chicago and dozens of people from AR are here knocking doors on her behalf, that it should tell you all you need to know. That she's isn't anything like the caricature that the GOP likes to paint.

He then dedicated a chunk of time speaking about all of HRC's accomplishments a private citizen, as a Senator from NY, and as SoS.

He also created a bit of contracts on health care, but stuck to what he's been saying this whole time.

Said she would make good things happen on the good days (i.e.: when he reversed trickle down economics or signed peace in Ireland), on the bad days (i.e.: the day President Obama must've had after San Bernardino), and also on the other days.

He closed by talking about Flint.

60 votes in the Senate. Said that he believes that the Republican Governors that haven't taken the MedicAid Expansion money will eventually do so, because it creates jobs. Didn't mention Sanders by name, FYI.

Said that the success of a President depends on what your positions are and what you know, but that it also depends on what you can do and whether or not you can work with others — that there's a difference between a change-talker and a change-maker.

Said that his sick of all this cynicism and all of the yelling, because it has nothing to do with people. That if folks are sick of it too, they should support a change-maker. And, that's HRC.

Remarks

WJC started by articulating what's at stake, and why we can't afford to let Republicans reverse everything that Pres. Obama has accomplished.

In framing what's at stake, he used climate change, voting rights, immigration, ISIS, and the economy under him (VS Reagan) as examples.

He then went on to talk about some of HRC's plans and positions, particularly health care and drug abuse. (Insert contrast language).

Had a little fun with the GOP, reminding folks about their 3D strategy. And, how they like to blame others for all of our problems, mainly Mexicans, Muslims, and President Obama and HRC.

He closed strongly saying we need a change-maker and not a change-talker (insert change-maker language), and dove into all of the things HRC has done as a private citizen, as a Senator from NY, and as SoS.

Halperin and Showtime caught him for five seconds on the ropeline. They asked if he was excited or nervous about Monday. WJC said he was excited!

He then asked what he thought would happen on Monday, and WJC walked away.

Color | New | Flag

He said trickle down economics is a failure and we can't go back. (He held up his graphs!).

Argued that we shouldn't resent success, but that we should rather move forward together.

Said it's slightly crazy that you only need to be 14 years old in IA to have a gun permit.

Said Liberal Republicans don't exist anymore.

Joked that he stared at HRC for several weeks before they actually met.

Remarks

Started by framing the election and articulating what's at stake. He also talked about America's potential.

He then covered clean energy, gun safety, voting rights, inclusive politics, and the Benghazi Committee.

He transitioned and made all of the biographical points he's been making, forcefully arguing that HRC has been a change maker her whole life.

He closed by making his Flint argument & by making the same points he made last night re her faith.

We're on to the next.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

QUESTION: Do you think we're covering her wrong?
BILL CLINTON: I'll tell you another example. Her best friends from childhood are coming down here, I think starting tomorrow from Chicago to canvass for her. She hasn't lived in Arkansas since [inaudible] January? 90 of them almost, 89 are going to New Hampshire, just getting four days going door to door.

At their own expense and a lot of them can't afford the trip. But they're doing it because they know her and they believe in her and they have got [inaudible] personal stories of how she made a difference and what kind of person she was.

And that's all that matters. The rest of the stuff--

QUESTION: Do you think the general public knows the real Hillary?
BILL CLINTON: What?

QUESTION: Do you think the general public knows the real Hillary?

BILL CLINTON: I think they're getting to know it, I think seeing their -- I think seeing the debates helped. I think seeing her go through that 11 hours helped. Remember what that guy in the CNN Town Hall meeting? He said, "I was a lukewarm supporter of yours." He said, "I saw that 11 hours. I am done [inaudible]. Nobody else in America could have done that."

QUESTION: Do you think that [inaudible]?

BILL CLINTON: I think it helped.

BILL CLINTON: But I think it all helps. I think the more people see her, [inaudible] they'll know what she cares about. But I think having her friends out there helps.

QUESTION: Do you think that Benghazi testimony was the strongest moment of her campaign?

BILL CLINTON: No, I think she's had a lot of strong moments.

QUESTION: Senator Sanders has gone after your wife for holding a fundraiser tonight. What's your response to that?

She spends enough time in Iowa?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BILL CLINTON: I think the far more important thing is before this economy cratered, she's the only person running for president in either party who went to Wall Street and said "You guys are dragging the economy in the ditch. You'd better change."

QUESTION: Do you think [inaudible]?

BILL CLINTON: Thank you. What?

QUESTION: Are you surprised Bernie Sanders isn't gung ho about a debate in New Hampshire?

BILL CLINTON: I don't know. I haven't thought about it. I think she said she'd do it if everybody showed up. I think debates are good for people, because they flesh out, you get to hear people talk about why they propose to do certain things.
And I personally think she's right about the healthcare thing, based on my experience. I have a -- nobody ever even got a healthcare bill for universal coverage out of committee from Harry Truman to me. But we got it out of two committees.

[Inaudible] situation. [Inaudible] when the Affordable Care Act passed. I was doing handstands of ecstacy [inaudible]. It's a lot easier to from 90 to 100 than from zero to 100 through 60 votes in the Senate and the House has voted 60 times to repeal it.
So I think the debates, though, they let you answer whatever questions people have, whatever they have. The public decides what they think is relevant.

QUESTION: [Inaudible] pie in the sky, that it just isn't possible. Is she angry enough to win in an election that we've seen where anger really has paid off?

BILL CLINTON: What?

QUESTION: Donald Trump is pretty angry. He's resonating with voters. Is she angry enough to win [inaudible]?

BILL CLINTON: It's important, if you're in this position, to have no feelings about that except you're trying to help people. She's angry that so many Americans have not participated in the recovery, have had their own potential and their [inaudible], their children [inaudible].

She's angry that we haven't done anything for these areas that have been left out and left behind, like Coal Country. She's angry that we haven't done enough to help people in this prescription drug and opiate epidemic. She just thinks about -- it's like when she called the Mayor in Flint: "What can I do to help?" That's what drives her.

What I said tonight is exactly who she's been for ever since the first day I met her. Do all the good you can. Her instinct is not who can I attack, who can I blame? It's not that you shouldn't ask people to take responsibility when they make mistakes, but her immediate instinct is what can I do to make it better. And that's what we need right now.

QUESTION: President Clinton, when you think about the general election map if Donald Trump blows this thing out and it's a Hillary Clinton match against Trump, what should voters be thinking about this week in terms of what Bernie Sanders' candidacy would look like up against Donald Trump versus your wife?

BILL CLINTON: I don't think like that. I think what voters should be thinking about this week is who is most likely to make my life, my children and grandchildren's lives and this country a place of shared prosperity, a force of security and peace and a place where we come together around solving our common social problems like [inaudible]. Who would be better?

QUESTION: But do you--

BILL CLINTON: The politics will take care of itself if people make the right decision about who's the most likely to have a positive impact.

QUESTION: And do you think the conventional wisdom will matter here for Donald Trump. I mean, if you've got Cruz who's got a better ground game, but Trump's got five million Twitter followers?

BILL CLINTON: I have no idea. I have no idea. It depends on whether it's an evidence-free or an evidence-matters election. It depends on whether people vote for someone who has a real chance to help them make their lives better. Those things are imponderable. Anger can be a good thing, properly channeled. Apprehensiveness can be a good thing, properly channeled. It depends on how it shakes out. All we can do, all she can do is be who she is, who she's been all her life. I think it will be in the end what the American people want.

QUESTION: Do you think those people who are really angry -- do you see an opportunity for a crossover between a Clinton and a Trump voter?

BILL CLINTON: Well, I think first of all she's the very first person to say, "Hey I know they vote Republican. We ought to do something for Coal Country." We have not done a good job in America in dealing with the areas that get hurt from globalization or from the rise of climate change or anything else.

Coal employment in American peaked 95 years ago. It's not like we just learned about this. Thousands of jobs were lost when President Bush, ostensibly a pro-coal president was in office because he couldn't stop the rise of natural gas.

QUESTION: Yes.

BILL CLINTON: And so look, I think there's an opportunity for everybody to get votes everywhere if you run a people-centered campaign and you trust people to think. You've got to really trust people. You've got to say, "There's a lot of stuff you've got to let go."

There's a lot of stuff you've got to step away from. If you run a people-centered campaign that's future oriented, I think there's opportunity everywhere.

WJC opened his speech by saying that HRC was in Adele earlier today. And that soon enough folks here will have the entire family in the state. He joked that Charlotte will be the difference-maker this election. That she can persuade him to do anything.

Recycled his 3Ds line & joked that you almost have to admire the GOP, because what's a fact here and there - that they live in a fact-free world.

Said we can't allow for the perfect to be the enemy of the good, that HRC will get the show on the road. That there's only one person who's a proven change maker on hostile territory and that's really important.

Reiterated that every single attempt to pass health care has always required 60 votes. That he and HRC were the first to do so. And that yeah they weren't successful, but that she ultimately got CHIP with Kennedy.

Said Newt told him that HRC was brilliant in the senate.

Said we have to deal with what we've got, i.e.: sixty Republicans in Congress.

Used his Flint bit, which got noticed.

References the Obama interview, saying he said that she's ready to be President.

Remarks

He started by covering a couple of issues, including climate change and immigration.

He then had a bit of fun with the GOP, saying that they're masters at labeling and blaming. (Insert 3Ds line).

Followed that up by making a lot of the biographical points he's been making on the trail. He talked about her time as a public citizen (insert health care line), as a Senator from NY, and as SoS.

Covered the economy: asked rhetorically: You don't mind if Warren Buffet makes money if he creates jobs, don't you?; and made the case why HRC will make the economy work for ever American again. He also said she's the only person running for President that went to Wall St. to speak against speculation.

Talked Flint. (Used his usual line).

Closed pretty strongly by saying she's the best change maker he's met. (Insert Obama line).

Statement of Campaign Chairman John Podesta on Benghazi Committee Election Year Delay

The U.S. House Select Committee on Benghazi announced today that it would delay its findings about the 2012 tragedy to "just months before the 2016 presidential election. " Hillary for America Campaign Chairman John Podesta released the following statement in response.

"The Gowdy Committee's admission today that it will not finish its investigation until 2016 is the most telling evidence yet that their investigation is solely about playing politics in the 2016 presidential campaign. This action is the latest example in a broad concerted effort by Republicans and their allies to launch false attacks against Hillary Clinton's record and deep experience on foreign affairs and national security.

"There have already been 21 congressional hearings, five independent or bipartisan reports, and millions of tax dollars spent in the process of investigating this three year old tragedy. This investigation would now be longer than the investigations of Iran-Contra, the Kennedy Assassination, Watergate and 9/11.

"Hillary Clinton has already spent five hours testifying at two congressional committee hearings but, as she's been saying since last year, she's happy to do it again. Unfortunately, Republicans insist her testimony is done behind closed doors, where the American public is unable to see their true, politically motivated intentions.

"Sadly, Republicans are determined to continue to exploit this tragedy in an effort to try and hurt her campaign."

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John,

We are now just four days away from the special primary election for the Massachusetts Senate.

As I write, dirty energy polluters and their allies like Karl Rove and the Koch brothers are likely calculating whether or not they should spend heavily in the general election to defeat our environmental champion, Ed Markey, and begin building their momentum for the 2014 cycle.

That's why the League of Conservation Voters is working hard to ensure Markey wins the primary in a big way and enters the general election in the strongest possible place.

I'll be in Massachusetts over the next several days, knocking on doors as part of our highly targeted grassroots field campaign . We have spent over $830,000 on things like door to door canvassing and phone banking to make sure Markey wins. We are aiming to knock on 250,000 doors and make 75,000 calls for Markey before the primary next Tuesday. If you are in the Bay State, I hope you will join me.

Thank you for being a partner in this work. As you will read from the update below, your investment in LCV is helping to build real political power for the environmental movement.

Onward,

Gene

Help LCV Action Fund Support Ed Markey

With your generous support LCV Action Fund has raised nearly $235,000 for Markey's campaign but we want to show our huge support and break our own fundraising record by raising over $250,000 before his primary on Tuesday. We hope you will join us in supporting Markey by making a generous gift today through LCVAF's GiveGreen website at www.givegreen.com . GiveGreen is the only bundling website devoted exclusively to raising political contributions for environmental champions and candidates. Bundling through GiveGreen magnifies the power of your contribution by calling attention to the environmental values that drive you to support the candidate in the first place.

Keystone XL Pipeline: All Risk; No Reward

LCV joined with other national and state organizations to form the "All Risk No Reward" Coalition, a new national group aimed at educating the American people about the many dangers of TransCanada's Keystone XL tar sands pipeline and urging President Obama and Secretary Kerry to reject it. The coalition brings together a vast network of organizations with focused messaging on the risks versus the rewards on the Keystone XL pipeline and the development of tar sands oils using paid media in a way that has never before been part of the anti-Keystone movement.

The coalition's latest TV ad was aired during the major Sunday news shows last week, and earlier this week, the coalition submitted more than one million comments, of which over 100,000 were from LCV members, urging President Obama, Secretary Kerry and the State Department to reject the dirty and dangerous Keystone XL pipeline. For more information on the coalition, please visit www.allrisknoreward.com .

The Safer Chemicals, Healthy Families Coalition Asks You to "Mind the Store"

LCV and the Safer Chemicals, Healthy Families Coalition has launched a national campaign called "Mind the Store," which asks ten major retailers to protect us by keeping the Hazardous 100+ toxic chemicals out of their products.

In addition, Senators Frank Lautenberg (NJ) and Kirsten Gillibrand (NY) re-introduced the Safe Chemicals Act to protect Americans from dangerous toxic chemicals found in products we use every day. We're grateful to our allies for taking on this critical issue and we look forward to helping pass it.

But we don't have to wait for progress in Washington to start making our stores and homes safer. Take action and sign on to our letter today -- with one click you can send your message to the big ten -- it's time to "Mind the Store!"

Senators to support Gina McCarthy, President Obama's nominee to lead the Environmental Protection Agency.

The ads focus on the EPA's work protecting the water we drink and the air we breathe, and encourage Senators in Alaska, Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, and South Dakota to support the President's nomination of Gina.

LCV Endorses Terry McAuliffe and Announces Keynote Speaker at LCV's Capital Dinner

Earlier this month, LCV and the Virginia League of Conservation Voters announced their endorsements of Terry McAuliffe for Governor of Virginia. McAuliffe's common sense approach to clean energy and conservation will grow the clean energy sector across the Commonwealth and protect the Chesapeake Bay and other natural resources. McAuliffe is committed to investing in renewable energy and energy efficiency, promoting better land use and transportation policies, and protecting Virginia's open space and farmland. McAuliffe's common sense policies stand in stark contrast to his opponent, Attorney General Ken Cuccinelli, who has built a reputation for his extreme anti-science positions, especially surrounding climate change.

We are also pleased to announce that Terry McAuliffe will be a keynote speaker at the Capital Dinner on Wednesday, June 12, 2013 in Washington, DC. You won't want to miss this exciting evening as the environmental community from around the country comes together to celebrate the successes of 2012 and build our movement for the future. Hey John,

Not sure you use this email address, but thought it was worth a shot.

I am finishing up the latest in a series of health care projects and considering new ones. The ridiculous but predictable McConnell response to Scalia's passing seems to set up a battle worth ditching other work to help on. I assume that a number of people are setting up campaigns to back the President's nominee and/or oppose the Republicans' latest bold rejection of the Constitutional process.

I know the Campaign will be all over this, as it should be. But seems to me a strong, independent campaign on the issue is critical to minimizing a polarization in the party between Hilary and Bernie supporters — among local union activists, just to cite one group prone to that kind of problem.

Let me know if there is anyway you think I could be helpful, or who you think is going to put together the most effective campaign to fill the vacancy. Feel free to pass my name along, if that's easiest. This email is good, and my cell phone is 202 256-7577.

Hope all is well with you, Mary and the kids. Jackie and I are both doing fine.

Best

Gerry

Subject: UPDATE (Ryan Budget)

John,

You really came through for us yesterday. More than 1,400 of you visited her Facebook, and Hayworth heard loud and clear that the Ryan Plan is bad for the middle class, bad for the Hudson Valley and bad for America.

But she didn't want to listen: As fast as we could tell her what we think of her mentor's Tea Party budget, your comments disappeared! She might be able to delete your posts, but she can't delete the harmful effects of the Ryan budget:

If you haven't posted yet, click to join us right now on Hayworth's Facebook page, and tell her that the Ryan Budget is a disaster for middle-class Americans.

If you haven't spoken out yet, you still have a chance to tell Nan Hayworth what you think of her "teacher and mentor" Paul's radical budget: that it will bring devastating cuts to education, critical medical research, Medicaid, and investments here at home. Not to mention marginalizing the middle class while giving more power to the wealthiest Americans – Nan Hayworth included.

Admit it, you're on Facebook right now anyway – click here to take 30 seconds to speak up for the middle class by telling Nan Hayworth what you think of the Ryan Budget.

Thanks for your help,

Sean

Subject:	Best Methods for Navigating Tracking/Media Monitoring Footage
Attachments:	YouTubeBoxInstructions.doc

Hello All,

To follow-up on this past weekend's request for access to our video library, attached and pasted below is a memo explicating the best methods for navigating tracking/media monitoring footage.

There are two main steps involved: 1) searching and viewing footage and 2) accessing and downloading footage. For step one, use our private youtube account. For step two, use our box.net account. Box.net is not the site you want to use to search and view video; the site requires you to download footage before viewing, which can sometimes be a timely affair. Step-by-step instructions for using each site are detailed below.

For those not in the trenches of the tracking/media monitoring world, it may be difficult to navigate these sites initially -- even with instructions. I'm happy to provide a tutorial for anyone who would like one. This can be done over the phone and it takes about 15 minutes.

If you have any questions, feel free to contact me.

Best,

Cammie

BEST METHODS for Navigating Tracking/Media Monitoring Footage

Best Method for Searching and Viewing Footage: Use YouTube

Description

Our private youtube account is the easiest and quickest way to search and view a broad collection of Progressive Media USA's tracking and media monitoring footage. In fact, every video clip the Tracking/Media Monitoring team has made of John McCain is posted on this private account. Further, every media monitoring clip we've captured is also posted on this private account. The site is currently holding thousands of video clips – and it is updated daily with more clips from our tracking/media monitoring efforts.

Every entry on the youtube account includes a transcript of the key parts of the clip. If you see a clip without a transcript, it means we are still in the process of working on that clip for a tracking or media monitoring report.

The quality of the footage on this private youtube account is low. However, every video on the youtube account has a corresponding high resolution version on our FTP site, Box.net. If you wish to download a video that you see on youtube, go to Box.net.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Instructions to Search and View Footage

- LOG IN: Our videos are all set to 'private' so no one can see or access them without logging into the account. To log in, go to youtube.com , click on 'Log-in' and type in the following information:

  Username: IssueAlliance

  Password: EyeHeartGOP

- ENTER 'My Videos' SECTION: First click on 'Account.' Then click on 'My Videos.' This is where you access our privately stored videos.
- SEARCH BOX: There are two search boxes on this page. You will want to use the search box that is preceded by the words 'Search my videos for.' This box lets you search within our youtube page. The other box allows you to search all of youtube and since our videos are private, they will not pop-up from that search.
- ENTER KEYWORDS: In the search box for 'my videos,' type in the keywords of the clips you'd like to see. For example, you can type in 'McCain Iraq' and all our clips tagged with those words will appear.
- VIEW VIDEO: Click on the video you'd like to watch and it will automatically play.
- VIEW TRANSCRIPT, CLIP LABEL: Immediately right to the video is a box that includes this information. Most of the time, the information is covered up. To view the full list of information, click on the blue 'More info' words.

Best Method for Downloading High Resolution Footage: Use Box.net

Description

Box.net is the vendor we use to store, back up and easily disseminate high quality video files. It operates similar to an FTP site. It is the site where you can go to download clips you've found on youtube. You do not want to use this site to search for video – as it requires you to download footage before viewing it.

Everything that appears on the private youtube site also appears on Box.net in a higher resolution. Tracking footage is available on the site in broadcast quality; media monitoring footage is available in DVD (when available) and web quality.

Also on Box.net are other projects, such as in-progress web videos, Bush videos, compressed files of full tracking video, etc.

Instructions to Find and Download Footage

- SEARCH and VIEW on YOUTUBE: Box.net is not built for easy viewing. So before you enter the site, it is best to find the clip you want on the private youtube account. Once you do that, copy down the clip label.
- LOG IN: To access the account go to Box.net. Type in the following:

  Username: Cammie@iraqcampaign.org

  Password: IssueAlliance2008

  And click 'Log In.'

- ENTER 'My Files' SECTION: Click on the 'My Files' tab to enter the section.
- ENTER ISSUE ALLIANCE FOLDER: Click on the blue 'Issue Alliance Team Folder' icon. You will enter a page with several folders such as 'John McCain,' 'Web Ads,' 'Bush Videos', etc.
- SEARCH/FIND CLIP: Click on the 'Search' box near the top of the page. A text box will appear. Type in the clip label of the clip you found on the private YouTube. Wait a few seconds – and the clip should appear.
- DOWNLOAD CLIP: Just click on it and it will begin downloading. Depending on your internet connection and the length of the clip, this could take several minutes or longer.

Subject: Watch Their Language! On listening to the Bipartisan Calls to End the Cuba Embargo

Having trouble viewing this message? Click Here

July 31, 2015

Dear Friends,

This morning, before an audience gathered at Florida International University, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said, "The Cuba embargo needs to go, once and for all. We should replace it with a smarter approach that empowers the Cuban private sector, Cuban civil society, and the Cuban-American community to spur progress and keep pressure on the regime."

Earlier this week, Representative Tom Emmer wrote in an op-ed arguing that none of the aims of U.S. policy are achievable with the embargo still in place. The Minnesota Republican said ending trade restrictions would advance the goals of human rights, free expression, and open markets in Cuba. This week, Emmer did more than talk; he introduced legislation to repeal the embargo with Rep. Kathy Castor, a Florida Democrat.

What are we in the U.S. supposed to think when a Democratic candidate for President of the United States and a Republican elected to the Congress in 2014 use the same language to increase public support to end the embargo that was used for decades to defend sanctions?

Let's start by recognizing that Secretary Clinton and Rep. Emmer are right to call for the trade embargo to end. Restrictions on trade and travel hurt Cubans economically and demonstrate disregard for their country's sovereignty, which hurts our relations with Cuba and the nations of Latin America more broadly.

These policies have also prevented the people of our country from traveling freely, exchanging with Cuban citizens from whom we have much to learn, and deprive U.S. companies of opportunities for profit and job-creation by locking them out of the Cuban market.

Emmer framed his bill and Clinton framed her Cuba policy speech by defining repeal of the embargo as an expression of the U.S. national interest.

Then, by coincidence or design, Emmer and Clinton both used language most likely to win the most valuable new converts to their cause: those least likely to change their minds because they are angry at Cuba's government or still hold out hope that after more than 50 years sanctions will finally begin to work.

Social science tells us that if you if you want someone to accept a new perspective make sure to present it to them in a context that doesn't trigger a defensive, emotional reaction.

Instead, talk to them, as Tom Emmer does, in ways that connect the case for ending the embargo to their most cherished values. As he said to a reporter for USA Today :

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"I understand there's a lot of pain on both sides of this issue that goes back many decades, something that a kid from Minnesota is not going to necessarily be able to understand. But I believe this is in the best interests of the Cuban people. This isn't about the Cuban government - it's about people on the street looking for more opportunity and to improve their quality of life."

The literature also says you can advance the argument further by providing information to people that they also assume to be true. This was undoubtedly why Secretary Clinton said that Cubans "want to buy our goods, read our books, surf our web, and learn from our people. They want to bring their country into the 21st century. That is the road toward democracy and dignity," she said, "And we should walk it together."

Their language advocating an end to the embargo must have been very effective, since it appeared to make supporters of the U.S. sanctions strategy very nervous - given their reactions.

Mauricio Claver-Carone, director of the U.S.-Cuba Democracy PAC, lectured Secretary Clinton that she'd gotten the politics wrong - she was energizing voters who disagree with her position, operating on the basis of manipulated, unreliable polls - and allowed herself to be "walked down a political plank."

Florida Senator Marco Rubio called her position "a grave mistake" and an act of "appeasement."

Jeb Bush said that Secretary Clinton is endorsing "a retreat in the struggle for democracy in Cuba," and he called her speech "insulting to many residents of Miami."

Of course, it depends what your definition of "many" is. A call to action "Join us to protest Hillary demanding the lifting of Cuban embargo" produced what Politico called "a relatively muted response from about two dozen participants."

To us, this is storm and fury signifying little.

The hardliners know -- as we do -- that when conservatives unite behind a policy that's consistent with their values, joined by businesses who believe the policy is good for their bottom lines, joined by foreign policy icons declaring the strategic interests of the U.S. will be realized by trading with Cuba rather than isolating it, joining the faith community, and joining experts and advocates who've been here all along - this is how great causes gather momentum.

In losing the battle for language, they are really losing the war on policy. Even if some of the rhetoric seems a little stale, the debate has actually shifted and the wind has already changed course.

U.S.-CUBA RELATIONS

Campaigning in Miami, Secretary Hillary Clinton calls on Congress to end Cuba embargo

In a speech delivered today at Florida International University, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton characterized the U.S.-Cuba policy debate as a choice between engagement and embargo, saying, "The Cuba embargo needs to go once and for all."

Clinton , running in the Democratic primary for the presidential nomination, acknowledged before an audience at FIU's Miami campus, that she had previously supported sanctions against Cuba, but that her views changed during her tenure as Secretary of State, as the Washington Post reported.

As President, Clinton said she would push for an end to the embargo, a next step she called "crucial" to continue progress made on the island. As reported by CBS News , Secretary Clinton challenged the leadership of the current Congress to change the policy:

"Today I am calling on [House] Speaker [John] Boehner and [Senate Majority Leader Mitch] McConnell to step up and answer the pleas of the Cuban people...By large majorities, they want a closer relationship with America."

If Congress failed to act, Clinton promised to use her executive authority to continue building ties between Cubans and Americans.

According to Reuters and other news agencies, Clinton warned against reversing the Obama Administration's changes to Cuba policy, as several candidates for the Republican nomination for President, including former Florida Governor Jeb Bush and Senator Marco Rubio, have suggested they would do.

Clinton maintained that returning to a policy of isolation would benefit no one more than "hardliners in Havana," making the case that this would amount to a strategic failure and tragedy for the Cuban people.

In a statement released before Clinton's speech, Senator Rubio said, "Unilateral concessions to the Castros will only strengthen a brutal, anti-American regime 90 miles from our shore."

Clinton said she supports the recent efforts of President Obama and Secretary of State John Kerry to re-establish diplomatic relations with Cuba, and recalled her own recommendation as Secretary of State to President Obama to work to lift the embargo of Cuba. Clinton was encouraged by policy changes implemented in 2009 and 2011 to encourage unlimited family travel and remittances, as well as to open opportunities for religious, academic and people-to-people visits to the island.

"Small businesses started opening, cell phones proliferated. I then became convinced that building ties between Cubans and Americans could be the best way to promote political and economic change on the island," Clinton said, arguing that the U.S. should "double down" on a policy of engagement.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"What makes Secretary Clinton's speech profound is her recognition that a policy of engagement rather than embargo offers the best way to realize U.S. interests in Cuba and the region, and to ensure that Cubans write the next chapter in their country's future," said Sarah Stephens, executive director of the Center for Democracy in the Americas.

Florida International University conducts a highly respected survey of public opinion among Cuban Americans living in South Florida. Its 2014 poll found that 52% of Cuban Americans opposed continuing the embargo while a larger majority, 68%, supported restoring diplomatic relations.

After Cuba trip, GOP Congressman seeks bipartisan repeal of Cuba embargo

Rep. Tom Emmer (MN-6), a Republican elected to Congress in 2014, and Rep. Kathy Castor (FL-14), a five-term Democrat whose Congressional district includes Tampa and St. Petersburg, introduced legislation this week to eliminate provisions of U.S. law that restrict trade with Cuba.

In an interview on Bloomberg Television, Emmer called Cuba a "natural market" for businesses in Minnesota and across the United States, and described opening trade relations as being "in the best interests of the Cuban people."

Rep. Castor said ending the trade embargo "will advance human rights and lift the fortunes of families and entrepreneurs on both sides of the Florida Straits [and give] a boost to our port and local small businesses in Florida."

Rep. Emmer briefed House GOP leaders and Cuban American colleagues on his effort to lift the embargo, but didn't expect everyone would be "thrilled" about it. "I understand there's a lot of pain on both sides of this issue that goes back many decades, something that a kid from Minnesota is not going to necessarily be able to understand," Emmer said. "But I believe this is in the best interests of the Cuban people. This isn't about the Cuban government - it's about people on the street looking for more opportunity and to improve their quality of life."

Rep. Emmer told USA Today he decided to introduce his bill to repeal the embargo after his trip to Cuba earlier this year - he visited the island with a bipartisan delegation led by the Center for Democracy in the Americas, which publishes the Cuba Central Newsblast.

"It really makes a difference when you see the facts on the ground," said Sarah Stephens, the Center's Executive Director. "You get an understanding that a measured, gradual opening is best for us and for Cuba."

Rep. Castor made her first trip to Cuba in 2013, also with the Center for Democracy in the Americas. Castor returned convinced that the U.S. should engage with the island. "Cuba is changing. They have embarked on economic reforms that the United States of America should promote." Castor said at the time. The United States of America now should normalize relations and begin a constructive dialogue with the island nation."

Since traveling to Cuba two years ago, Castor has been a champion for the Tampa business community's efforts to increase travel and trade to the island.

Mauricio Claver-Carone, Executive Director of the U.S. Cuba Democracy PAC, sought to dampen expectations for repealing the embargo, pointing to recent House votes to roll back several of President Obama's recent Cuba policy changes. "If anyone is trying to imply that somehow, within a couple of months, 61 members of the House of Representatives are going to flip, I think they have an unpleasant surprise coming."

But Steven Law, President and CEO of the conservative Super PAC American Crossroads, who also advises the pro-normalization advocacy group Engage Cuba, thinks more members are going to follow Emmer. Law noted, "A lot of Republicans started out with the reflexive view that if Obama was behind it, there's something wrong with it. But I think that's changing. A lot of these members are hearing from constituents that it's a new day and we need a new policy to respond to those changes."

In June, Senator Jerry Moran (KS), a Republican, introduced similar legislation to end the trade embargo with Maine Senator Angus King, an Independent.

U.S. removes Cuba from its worst offender list in annual human trafficking report

Acknowledging the island's "significant efforts" to comply with its minimum standards for combatting human trafficking, the U.S. State Department upgraded Cuba from Tier 3 status to Tier 2 Watch List status this week in its 2015 Trafficking in Persons report .

The United States first added Cuba to its Tier 3 list in 2003 .

Senator Marco Rubio, a critic of the Obama Administration's effort to reset relations with Havana, criticized the report as politically motivated. "It is important that ... a country's rating not be determined by political considerations but by the country's record on this issue," Rubio commented. "For example, I find it difficult to believe that Cuba has been elevated this year from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List solely based on the Cuban regime's record."

As we recently explained , the State Department report assesses the efforts of countries to comply with minimum standards to combat all forms of human trafficking set forth by the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000. According to the annual report, Tier 1 countries are compliant with the minimum standards, Tier 2 countries are making significant efforts to comply, Tier 2 Watch List countries are making significant efforts but have problems, such as an inability to produce sufficient evidence of their efforts, and Tier 3 countries are not making significant efforts to comply with the U.S. minimum standards to combat all forms of human trafficking. Tier 3 designated countries can be subject to sanctions.

For the past two years, the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons reports have described efforts by Cuba to combat human trafficking, including cooperating with foreign authorities' investigations and providing information to the public on the government's efforts to combat trafficking, which include 13 criminal prosecutions, acceding to the United Nations Trafficking in Persons Protocol and inviting the UN Rapporteur on Trafficking to visit the island, and designating the Ministry of Labor and Social as the lead agency coordinating government-wide efforts. The latest report continues to identify deficiencies in Cuba's efforts and makes recommendations to improve them, including to pass new, comprehensive legislation that would cover all forms of trafficking.

Since President Obama's December 17th announcement that he would seek to normalize relations with Cuba, his Administration has issued regulations to loosen certain restrictions on trade with and travel to the island, removed Cuba from the State Department's list of state sponsors of terrorism, re-established formal diplomatic relations and, now, has upgraded Cuba's status in its annual human trafficking report.

U.S. and Cuban scientists collaborate to study rare orchids

New scientific collaborations are becoming possible due to warming relations between the U.S. and Cuba, reports the Associated Press. In July, researcher Ernesto Mujica of Cuba's Ministry of Science ECOVIDA Research Center joined colleagues from the University of Florida and Illinois College to study the rare ghost orchid flower in the Florida Panther National Wildlife Refuge. Dr. Mujica waited two years for his visa to be approved, which was finally achieved with help from U.S. Senator Dick Durbin and Illinois College President Dr. Barbara Farley, according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service .

Illinois College researcher Dr. Lawrence Zettler said that scientists "hope to compare ghost orchid populations in southwest Florida to those in Cuba as a means of better understanding the species' specific habitat requirements and needs for continued survival," adding that this U.S.-Cuban scientific collaboration demonstrates, "how cooperation between our two countries may help at least one rare species in peril."

The team of scientists documented the endangered ghost orchids and for the first time ever was able to bring Cuban innovation to improve long-term identification and monitoring methods of the rare flowers. Prior to Mujica's contribution, there were eleven known ghost orchids cataloged in the Panther Refuge; now scientists have identified more than 80 new orchids, according to Tom Mackenzie of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Mackenzie said that this "would not have been possible without years of persistence and the recent, history-making improvements in U.S. relations with Cuba." As we have previously reported, the U.S. scientific community has welcomed closer relations with Cuba as a boon for science that holds the potential for beneficial medical and environmental advancements.

CUBA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS

Sherritt CEO sees brighter future in Cuba

Canadian oil and mineral company Sherritt International Corporation is optimistic about its business on the island as relations continue to warm between the U.S. and Cuba, reports the Toronto Star. Despite flagging oil and nickel prices in recent years that have hit Sherritt's bottom line, causing the company to lay off 60 employees last fall, CEO David Pathe sees growing opportunity in Cuba.

Sherritt has done business in Cuba for over 20 years and is the island's largest foreign investor, producing two-thirds of Cuba's oil and holding 50 percent ownership of the Moa nickel and cobalt mining joint venture with the Cuban government. While Pathe says that Cuba is a "remarkably stable place to do business," Sherritt has had to cope with "negative connotations" of conducting business on the island and serious practical impediments. Due to the U.S. embargo on Cuba, Sherritt executives are banned from entering or doing business with the U.S., as we previously reported.

Ending trade restrictions between the U.S. holds the potential for significant cost savings if Sherritt were able to access U.S. ports to sell oil and use high-quality American-made mining equipment. U.S. heavy equipment company Caterpillar has long supported ending the embargo and would relish selling equipment into the Cuban market.

Pathe maintains that ending the embargo "would be a big benefit to us. I think it would change the way our assets are viewed and remove some of the stigma that, from our experience, has been somewhat overblown, and that has the potential to create new opportunities for us."

Bioven seeks IPO to help market Cuban cancer drug

Malaysian biotech company Bioven is seeking an initial public offering (IPO) which will help provide the company with the financial resources it needs to more quickly move a Cuban-developed cancer drug to market, reports the Financial Times.

Bioven acquired rights to the drug developed over the past 25 years by the Cuban Center of Molecular Immunology (CIM). As we previously reported, CIM also reached an agreement with Roswell Park Cancer Institute to begin clinical trials in the U.S. following the trade mission led by New York Governor Andrew Cuomo in April.

The drug, known as CimaVax, has been described as a lung cancer vaccine, and showed promise in mid-stage trials, extending the survival of younger patients an average of 6.5 months longer than existing treatments.

Bioven CEO Stephen Drew, formerly an executive at GlaxoSmithKline, believes the closer relationship between the U.S. and Cuba will help open Cuba to more foreign investment and research in biotechnology. But he pointed out that companies such as Bioven, which already have longstanding relationships with Cuba, would retain an advantage over newer players.

IN CUBA

Surpluses and shortages in the Cuban economy

Inefficiencies in Cuba's economic system are creating bottlenecks in the construction industry and other sectors with implications for the country's economic growth and employment goals, according to Progreso Weekly.

Construction work is often delayed and difficult to complete due to insufficient production of key goods like concrete. Yariel, a Camagüey construction manager, told Progreso, "To do construction work in Cuba, it's not enough to have money or work crews. You also need a lot of luck and patience because, when you least expect it, you have to stop production for something as unusual as the unavailability of wire mesh for reinforcements."

Production shortages can be exacerbated by hoarding in the bureaucratic chain, which particularly affects the construction sector. For example, cement producers operate routinely produce below capacity because their stores are overflowing. Economist Juan Triana argues that inefficiencies arise because of over-centralization, which affects Cuba's ability to sell goods abroad: "Worst is the need to apply constantly for permits. That excessive centralization has generated one of our worst ills: our minimal capacity to export."

Periodic shortages of domestic goods such as toiletries and appliances can also be attributed to the lack of purchasing power from foreign countries and various inefficiencies in the Cuban production, distribution, and commercialization systems. Wholesale markets have not been widely created, which makes it hard to get both imported and domestic goods to market. Market inefficiencies such as lack of wholesaling also present challenges to entrepreneurs who need supplies, as we have previously analyzed .

Former Clinton aide Mark Penn leaving Microsoft

By Adam B. Lerner

6/17/15 11:09 AM EDT

Former Clinton aide Mark Penn is leaving his executive position at Microsoft to form a new fund to invest in digital marketing services.

Stagwell Group LLC, the new company Penn has launched, has already raised a quarter of a billion dollars, including from Microsoft's former CEO Steve Ballmer. The group will target companies that are "digital-first" and leverage technology to pursue creative business.

"Every client is looking for how to combine good advertising creative with good data analytics," Penn told The Wall Street Journal, which first reported his new venture. "I don't think they're getting those answers from the companies they've got, even if they've got some of the biggest companies in the world."

The new group, Penn said, will begin with medium-sized companies and attempt to grow from there. "There's a lot of room for new blood in the advertising and marketing industry," he told the Journal.

Penn is best known as the founder of polling firm Penn, Schoen and Berland Associates, through which he served as a top aide to a number of prominent politicians. He served as chief strategist of Hillary Clinton's 2008 presidential campaign and worked on President Bill Clinton's 1996 reelection campaign. He also advised British Prime Minister Tony Blair in his winning reelection campaign in 2005. He was named to his executive position at Microsoft in July 2012.

Satya Nadella, Microsoft's current CEO, informed employees of Penn's move in a letter on Wednesday.

"From helping craft a Super Bowl ad and helping design new business and marketing models to his work in data analytics, Mark has helped me set the company on a new course," he wrote. "I look forward to seeing what he does next."

I did some research on line as well but kept coming up with the same information, unless a government 457(b), distribution may not be rolled over.

In particular, I am interested in the Committee's efforts to identify fascist infiltration and propaganda in the United States. The Committee's work appears to be documented in an extensive series of GPO publications and has been the subject of some secondary research. The topic is also of interest to me. Before enrolling in law school, I earned a PhD in history. My dissertation focused on the history of Nazi Germany. Drawing on scholarship concerning German espionage and propaganda directed against the United States during the 1930s, the paper could use this historical case study to explore the challenges that congressional investigations face in addressing domestic threats to national security.

Mark Naymik
Plain Dealer Politics Writer/Columnist
Tuesday, January 15, 2008m

Columbus -- They will hate the compliment, but a number of Democratic-leaning groups in Ohio are thinking like Republicans.

During a daylong conference Sunday, dubbed "Rootscamp," dozens of progressive groups met in a Columbus office tower to better coordinate their volunteers and resources to influence state politics.

The gathering was significant for several reasons. First, the event wasn't about candidates.

Four years ago, it seemed the progressive movement was driven by hype for then-Democratic presidential candidate Howard Dean, who thumbed his nose at the party's centrist politics. As a progressive, you had to be behind him to keep your street cred.

The buzz on Sunday was the boring-sounding phrase "best practices," as groups talked about the nuts and bolts of reaching voters, raising money and building coalitions. (John Edwards and Barack Obama seemed to get more nods from participants when pressed.)

The conference also showed many signs of long-term thinking.

"We have to look beyond the top of the ticket," urged Scott Nunnery, who heads America Votes, an organization that's trying to coordinate the voter outreach efforts of more than 50 groups.

America Votes, which helped organize the event Sunday, landed in Ohio four years ago along with America Coming Together (ACT), MoveOn.org and others.

These get-out-the-vote groups, funded by progressive millionaires and labor unions, turned out record numbers of Democrats for John Kerry. But they plowed too many resources into the urban counties while Bush owned the rural counties.

Bush won the state's 63 rural counties and 16 suburban counties. Kerry won the nine urban counties.

Today, ACT no longer exists. Move- On.org left town. America Votes downsized from 43 staffers to six.

But America Votes, along with new progressive faces such as Progress Ohio, have figured some things out.

They realize that they have to get labor unions, the Sierra Club, Planned Parenthood and dozens of other progressive groups working together. And working in rural parts of the state.

Four years ago, it seemed as if groups didn't chase rural progressives outside of the college town of Athens, home of Ohio University. That's been changing, in large part because of the success Gov. Ted Strickland and U.S. Sen.

Sherrod Brown found in rural Ohio in 2006.

At last year's first "Rootscamp," labor leader Joe Eureste from Defiance took the lead on building a rural campaign for special-interest groups.

Next month, he and 16 progressive organizations are to unveil the result: the Rural Organizing Campaign. It will try to reach like-minded voters by networking through local progressive leaders in seven Northwest Ohio counties dominated by Republicans.

"Groups will be able to plug into someone where they have never had any leadership," he said.

The Ohio Democratic Party, which has never been as well-organized as the Ohio GOP, made a brief presentation at the event that stressed its rural outreach program.

Executive Director Doug Kelly said the party would promote the presidential nominee in rural counties from the minute he or she is named.

Borrowing a page from Strickland's campaign, the party plans to run ads on rural and Christian radio stations early, Kelly said.

Of course, the progressive groups have plenty of differences and agendas that have split them in the past. Some progressives, for instance, snickered at supporters of Hillary Clinton.

But for now, Chad White, a union grocery worker from Fayette County, in Southwest Ohio, feels the movement spreading.

"Everyone went different directions in 2004," he said. "I like that there's more unity and solidarity. Even with the chaos of the primary, we are still together."

Larry Bresler, who has been organizing around social issues for 30 years, said progressives were organized in 2004 but are more focused this year.

He attributes this in part to the successful campaign in 2004 to pass a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, which was opposed by Democrats.

"People have taken some of the anger and developed better planning," he said.

Subject:	They won't even vote on it

John --

President Obama is in Dallas today urging Americans who support the American Jobs Act to demand that Congress pass it already.

Though it's been nearly a month since he laid out this plan, House Republicans haven't acted to pass it. And House Majority Leader Eric Cantor is out there actually bragging that they won't even put the jobs package up for a vote -- ever.

It's not clear which part of the bill they now object to: building roads, hiring teachers, getting veterans back to work. They're willing to block the American Jobs Act -- and they think you won't do anything about it.

But here's something you can do: Find Republican members of Congress on Twitter, call them out, and demand they pass this bill.

Be the first to use our new tool and tweet for jobs.

Here's why we built this new tool, and why it's important.

If you've written letters or sent email to Congress before, you know it can be a frustrating experience -- sometimes it takes them weeks to respond, and sometimes they don't respond at all.

But many members of Congress personally receive the messages sent to them on Twitter, so you have a better chance of getting your message directly to them.

And even if they don't respond, your message will be public -- front and center for everyone who follows you or your representative. That means their staff, other constituents, and the media will see the mounting pressure.

So tweet for jobs now:

http://my.barackobama.com/Tweet-for-Jobs

If you don't use Twitter, you can also contact someone else who needs to hear from you about this bill: The editor of your local paper. We have a tool that lets you send a letter to the editor, and even gives you facts and tips to help you write the most effective note you can. Write one now:

http://my.barackobama.com/Letters-for-Jobs

The American Jobs Act is not controversial legislation.

Ideas like rebuilding our roads and bridges, repairing our public schools, and keeping teachers in our classrooms are all ideas the Republicans have said they would support or have even proposed themselves.

But they're so dead set on preventing anything from getting done on President Obama's watch that they will reverse, deny, or ignore what they've said and done in the past -- even if it costs more American jobs.

And remember: They're willing to cost you and any other American your job, or your chance at a new job, because they think that doing nothing won't cost them theirs. Tweet at Republican members of Congress now and tell them you want a vote on the jobs bill right away:

http://my.barackobama.com/Tweet-for-Jobs

Or write a letter to the editor:

http://my.barackobama.com/Letters-for-Jobs

I know we've been asking a lot of you lately, and all of us here would have loved to give you a break this week after all the emails we've been sending. But the reality is that we're building a grassroots organization from the ground up even as we're supporting the President in battles that need to be won right now. And that means we've got to be willing to stay focused week after week from now through the election.

Thanks again to all of you who donated to the campaign before the end of the third quarter, and for everything else you do to have the President's back.

Subject:	British Feature Film Appearance Request for John Podesta

Dear Mr Podesta,

I would like to request a brief discussion with you in Washington for inclusion in a feature film, to be released in the UK & Europe later this year.

I am a British filmmaker, with a background in BBC News, and I have been researching/conducting interviews with high calibre individuals on both sides of the pond concerning the more credible aspects of the ufo issue and the apparent political will to withhold information pertaining to certain cases.

Throughout my 20 year interest I have also followed the Roswell case closely and at the invitation of the Roswell Investigation Team conducted interviews with the last living witnesses to the case. Filming included speaking with veteran S Sgt Arthur Oscepchook of the 509th BW in New Mexico, a wonderful man now in his 90s, who told me personally how he would 'love to know' what he transported by air from Roswell in 1947. My interviews could well be the last time these people give their testimony in public.

Finally, in May this year, I will conduct interviews with certain retired NASA personnel and other eminent US/UK scientists which will complete my exhaustive 2 year investigation. The production will be a comprehensive, well balanced and seriously minded feature documentary film covering the wider question of historic ufo classification. My aim, as a curious skeptic in support of open government, is to encourage level headed discussion in a fresh and engaging way.

I am aware of your previous work under the Clinton Administration to declassify historical documents, and your support of other seriously minded investigators such as Leslie Kean. I am not looking for any specific comment pertaining to particular cases. All I ask is for is your general perspective, perhaps some insight on issues around historical declassification, or indeed any other comments you may have.

I understand you are very busy but I hope now may be a good time, and as I am based in the UK I felt the best solution would be to place myself at your convenience in Washington. As such I will be staying in Capitol Hill from the 7th - 10th May 2015 when I hope to introduce myself to you and perhaps film the interview.

I would highly value whatever contribution you could make, long or short as it may be, and I would be privileged to receive your response. I am confident a 15 minute window would afford us ample opportunity, as I have conducted countless high level interviews over the years including a British Prime Minister in residence at No. 10 Downing Street, so I am familiar with protocols and constraints.

I can't stress enough how important your input would be to what is now a multinational production.

Yours sincerely,

Simon Sharman

Highlight #1
Bash Reports on the Bush-McCain visit to Iowa (CNN 06/19/08 04:05pm)
WOLF BLITZER: John McCain also getting a first hand look at the flooding in Iowa today. Some are wondering why the republican would go there on the same day as President Bush. Lets get some answers from Dana Bash. She is watching this story for us. So why did Senator McCain decide to go precisely the same day the president was going and I take it their paths did not cross.

DANA BASH: No they didn't cross, Wolf. But to answer your first question, look this is a no brainer for presidential hopefuls it is a chance for them in any kind of natural disaster it has happened many years in the past a chance for them to go and look presidential a chance for them to go and get seen and reality is John McCain did actually talk to victims, he talked to local sheriffs, mayors, and so forth to make it seem like he knows how to do the job especially in a state like Iowa, where it is a battleground state this is very important for Senator McCain to do just like he did, just like Senator Obama did over the weekend.

BLITZER: I assume they knew that the President was going to be there today as well Dana, that that is obviously public information.

BASH: that is right they did know that President Bush was planning to go there when the McCain campaign planned for the Senator t be there on the same day. They knew very well that the images of both of them there would be up on the screens simultaneously […] it is a bit ironic given the fact that you remember that exactly two months ago today you heard Elaine talking about President Bush and Katrina. John McCain stood in New Orleans and made clear that he thinks, understands, that the mismanagement of President Bush's administration was pretty much one of the biggest problems of the administration and it was one of the ways that he tried the hardest to separate himself from the unpopular president. Saying that the response was disgraceful so in the end it really was interesting to see these two images although they were about 60 miles apart from one another at the very same time in Iowa, it was interesting to see these images. On the one hand you saw president Bush trying to show that he learned a lesson from Hurricane Katrina and John McCain pretty much doing the same thing saying I understand that I will be different kind of president then the current republican president.

Bush Remarks in Iowa: "I Can Assure You The Government Cares Deeply… There Are 600 FEMA People Moving Around The State" (FNC 06/19/08 2:34pm)
GEORGE W BUSH: I know a lot of farmers and cattlemen are, you know, hurting right now, along with the city people. The other thing I think is just very important is that the Senator and Governor have made it clear that, you know, as we [indecipherable] about Cedar Rapids, we also gotta worry about the little towns. A lot of folks are wondering whether or not the government cares about them too. And I can assure you that the Governor cares deeply about it. And so do we. Paulson, who's the head of FEMA, tells me that there are 600 FEMA people moving around the state. And that ought to help people in the smaller communities know that somebody's there to listen to them and care about them. Our hearts and prayers from around the nation go out to the people here. It's a tough time for you.

CROWD MEMBER: It is.

BUSH: Good news is the people of Iowa are tough-minded people. You'll come back better. Sometimes it's hard to see it when you're this close to the deal.

CROWD MEMBER: Well it's gonna take time.

BUSH: A lotta people aren't getting much sleep these days. (crowd laughs) You're exhausted, I understand that. But uh, you know, we wanna—Congress passed uh- about to pass, you know, a big chunk of disaster money, which put—I hope puts, helps put people's minds at ease. And we're gonna help you, help you recover. Anyway, thanks for letting me come by to see you.

CROWD MEMBERS: Thank you, Mr. President.

"Hardball" Highlights That Both McCain and Bush were in Iowa Today: "Looks Like McCain Wanted to Make Sure There Would Be No Photos With Bush at a Scene of a Natural Disaster" (MSNBC 06/19/08 5:30pm)
CHRIS MATTHEWS: And tonight's Big Number. Senator John McCain and President Bush were out in Iowa today, that's today, touring areas hard hit by the flooding. So you'd think the presumptive GOP nominee and the sitting Republican president would make a joint appearance, right? Wrong. In fact, it seems like the two made a point of staying away from one another. So just how close did the two guys get, McCain and Bush? Within 35 miles of each other. President Bush was in Iowa City and Senator McCain was in Columbus junction, just 35 miles apart from each other. Looks like McCain wanted to make sure there would be no photos with Bush at a scene of a natural disaster. 35 miles, tonight's Big Number.

Highlight #2
"ABC World News" McCain is Taking Public Financing Because he Can't Fundraise like Obama (ABC: 06/19/08 06:40pm)
CHARLES GIBSON: […] As of the end of April Obama held a 3 to 1 fundraising advantage over McCain who said he would take public financing. […] So [Obama} changed his mind. Why?

GEORGE STEPHANOPOLOS: Well that flip flop is a price they are willing to pay. […] They say John McCain is also gaming the system by going in and out of the public financing system. […]

GIBSON: So I don't care John McCain if you criticize me because I have a whole lot more money than you do. […]

STEPHANOPOULOS: The system allows you to spend 85 million, the public finance system in September and October. He's likely to fundraise over double that. […]

GIBSON: Which puts McCain at a tremendous disadvantage in the general election.

STEPHANOPOULOS: That's exactly right and Senator McCain knows that which is why he's hitting Senator Obama so hard on this right now. He has no choice but to take the public financing because he likely can't raise that 85 million that he needs.

"NBC Nightly News" Covers the "Firestorm" Created By Obama's Decision, Mention's Obama's Charge That McCain Himself "Waffled" on Public Funds By Applying For Public Funds During Primaries and Than Later Withdrawing (NBC election campaign. Public financing was put in place more then three decades ago after the Watergate scandal. And Obama's decision created a firestorm today [...]

ANDREA MITCHELL: Barack Obama wasn't answering questions today. Instead he announced his decision online [...] Now instead of getting $85 million this from the government to campaign this Fall, he can raise hundreds of millions online, overwhelming John McCain, who said today he will stick to the limits for the general election. McCain in Iowa today:

JOHN MCCAIN: He has completely reversed himself, gone back not on his word to me but the commitment he made to the American people. That's disturbing.

ANDREA MITCHELL: [...] Obama's campaign says that's to counter McCain, who wrapped up his nomination months ago. And they charge McCain himself waffled on this. Applying for public funds during the primaries, then withdrawing from the public system during the nomination fight. All this will likely end a campaign finance system McCain once fought to save. As the internet enables any candidate, not just the rich, to spend unlimited dollars if they can inspire a large following online [...]

McCain Bashes Obama For Denying Public Financing, Now At Tremendous Cash Disadvantage (CNN, 6/19/08, 11:04am)
CARL CAMERON: More money, basically. The way the public financing system works is that once a candidate is nominated, meaning Obama goes to the convention in Denver, they make it official, he's the party standard bearer, at the end of that convention under normal circumstances, were he to accept public financing, he would get a check for just north of 84 million dollars, almost 85 million dollars. That would have to sustain him from the end of August until election day in the first week of November. He is not going to take those public financing, which are tax dollars, it's worth noting. Instead he'll self finance, meaning he'll go to his 1.5 million plus donors and say, as he did in that video you showed a moment ago, send me more money because I'm going to self finance. He's the first presidential candidate since Richard Nixon, when the public financing system was created, to do it entirely on private donations. And he runs into a little bit of a problem here because, of course, he said he was going to stick within the public financing system, not do it privately, and that's why McCain's beating him up. For Obama it means the opportunity to not be capped at 85 million dollars, to spend whatever he can raise beyond that, and odds are he could raise as much as twice that.

JANE SKINNER: And that is obviously an enormous gap. What does it mean for McCain?

CARL CAMERON: It's not good. It means that Senator McCain, who does not have the capacity to raise more than that, will accept the public financing money as he has said. And he's left with less many to spend in the general election, 85 million, Obama can raise above that. But he does have an opportunity now to hold Obama accountable for breaking a pledge to the American people. It was Obama who first proposed that both candidates agree to public financing and work out the details over the 527s and outside independent groups that pour in so much money. In that clip that you played there Jane, Obama bashes republicans for having mastered the outside independent expenditure, but John McCain, among republicans, is the least guilty. In fact he has been the harshest critic of these outside independent groups, having denounced and renounced them. He told his supporters, don't give them any money, and the republican party, frankly, is running from 527s, looking for other vehicles to use because they know that McCain is so adamantly opposed to the outside independent expenditure. None the less, it means that McCain for the first time in modern election history as the republican nominee, is going to be at a colossal cash disadvantage behind Barack Obama.

John McCain: Obama "Completely Reversed Himself" and "That's Disturbing" (MSNBC 06/19/08 6:20pm)
DAVID GREGORY: Let me move on and talk about campaign finance again and the fact again, the big headline today, Obama's opting out of public financing. He's gonna run up the totals from his supporters. John McCain not happy about it. They had a deal, he's accepting the public funds. This is what McCain said:

JOHN MCCAIN: He signed his name himself on a piece of paper that said that he would if, I the Republican nominee took public financing in the general election that he would too [...] He has completely reversed himself and gone back not on his word to me but the commitment he made to the American people. That's disturbing.

Subject:	TWEETS: LinkedIn post & Speech

Hi John-

Right now the plan is for the LinkedIn post to go live around 9:30 AM ET. With the help of our social media team the LinkedIn folks caved and gave you "Influencer" status-- basically the equivalent of having a verified account on Twitter. Functionally. it means that instead of establishing "connections" with other LinkedIn users, people will instead "follow" your account to receive updates. I think it makes a lot more sense for your public profile and for how we'd likely use the platform.

Below you'll find Tweets to promote the post-- wanted to send in advance in case you're not online tomorrow morning. HRC's account will also Tweet out the post and retweet us.

I've also included a speech tweet and will plan on livetweeting 1-2 quotes and hopefully an original pic from the event.

Sound good to you? Thanks!

TWEETS 7/27

To go out at 9:30 am

Yesterday @HillaryClinton laid out smart, simple steps to put us on a path to cleaner, safer power from day one of her Presidency. (1/2)

I wrote about her clean energy plan for my inaugural @LinkedIn post. READ: XX LINK XX (2/2)

To go out later in the day

Every day across America people are beginning to see the impacts of climate change on their lives. XX LINKEDIN LINK XX

To go out when HRC speaks (will also livetweet 1-2 quotes and hopefully an original pic from the event)

Subject: NY Times Magazine Profile: "Joe Sestak, the 60th Democrat"

Dear John,

This weekend … affirming our status as the nation's No.1 Senate race … the NY Times Sunday Magazine is out with an in-depth, profile piece on Joe entitled : "Joe Sestak, the 60th Democrat."

It begins, in part:

- "Joe Sestak ... a Navy admiral … Not yet five years removed from military service, Sestak has shown himself to be a quick study in his new field ... to become the Democratic candidate for Senate in Pennsylvania. In November, he'll face the former congressman Pat Toomey … in what will be a closely watched battle of ideological opposites .... " Click here for article.

BUT WAIT!!!! Before you click through to read the article, we wanted to let you know of yesterday's DSCC-sponsored Garin, Hart, Yang poll that has the race, Toomey 46% - Sestak 44% ... a statistical dead heat!

For the past two months, Congressman Toomey (due to his fundraising advantage coming out of his non-contested Republican primary) has been running daily television ads non-stop across Pennsylvania ... and yet, without us having gone up on television, the race remains in a virtual dead-heat!

Why? Because our summer operation has been successful!

We've blunted Congressman Toomey's "air campaign" advantage by running an aggressive "ground campaign" - expanding our field operations, growing our volunteer army, and directly contacting voters - while in the process re-stocking our depleted financial resources. Our "deployed retail ops" have uniquely gotten the word out to individual voters about Congressman Toomey's extreme, radical, right-wing, conservative views that are out of step with Pennsylvanians!

NOW … as we come to the end of our executed summer operation and prepare to launch our fall campaign … THIS RACEIS ABOUT TO GET SUPER-CHARGED!!

We are just 10 days away from launching our fall campaign - the HEART OF OUR CAMPAIGN - and we are asking you to please make a contribution of $15, $25, $50, $75, $100, $250, whatever you are able to afford!

Help us get our fall campaign off to a great launch … as the NY Times article implies … " Joe Sestak, the 60th Democrat [Senator]!"

Best regards,
Rich Sestak
Campaign Director

Dear Mr. Podesta,

John West here, the gentleman and his husband who had the honor to drive you to O'hare after the Chicago finance committee meeting.

Wanted to thank you for the picture and conversation regarding some of our grass roots efforts by many long time Hillary Supporters - many who were 2008 delegate that have been corralled into one very organized Facebook Group and contact list by Kim Frederick, from Houston, Texas.

Kim Frederick also had wonderful ideas for the QR code and for assigning merchandise I.D's to lower dollar fund raisers to encourage folks to take part in promoting sales which I shared at the meeting and in the packet I shared with you. She's a Hill Starter and has raised $11,000 to date and has a local Houston fundraiser this evening as well as been a big help in assisting the Texas Field Organizer on identifying key strategically located folks for helping with setting up organizing events throughout the massive state of Texas. Beyond Texas, she has been key in getting the top volunteers in contact with field organizers throughout the country and providing a forum for both field organizers and super volunteers to coordinate and exchange information efficiently.

I have an urgent request I was wondering if you could help with. Kim Frederick will be in NY for work from tomorrow night through Sunday and being a leader and organizer of 50 states worth of very capable, motivated and experienced grass roots organizers - I was hoping she could get an invite for one of the events in New York as well as an audience with someone to discuss how best to utilize this amazing resource of folks she has assembled and keeps organized and engaged. It appears Adam will be travelling at that time - and they will be missing one another unfortunately. Kim has even organized a 50 person super volunteer get together at 6 p.m Friday evening at O'Reilly's Bar and Kitchen while she is in town.

I can attest to Kim's long time dedication and hard work already. She was a state level delegate in 2007 and is involved heavily in organizing in Texas for the Democratic Party. It would be really helpful to the grass roots effort and really energize folks to see one of their own have some audience and a photo op. IT's also her birthday so I can't help but feel compelled to at least send a hail Mary email. Anything would help to make sure there isn't a wasted opportunity with her business trip to New York (at someone else's expense!)

Dear John,
Hope you're well and things are gaining momentum in Brooklyn. As I'm sure you've seen, the SDGs outcome has been finalized and agreed. It's not perfect, but it is extraordinary that a multilateral group would agree to this scope of ambition (ending poverty, reducing inequality, fighting climate change) – now the question is, will it work? Can enough political momentum be built and sustained, and enough countries begin to take actions to secure the agenda's success?
I was wondering if we could arrange a 20-25 minute phone call in the next week or two to:

1. Update you on the state of play;
2. Solicit your advice on strategy, especially with USG;
3. See if you're available for any light-touch outreach to move things forward.

All the best, and look forward to speaking soon.
Warmly,
Molly

Subject:	1 in 6 teachers laid off

Friend,

If there's one thing every Illinois voter needs to know before Election Day, it's this:

A victory for Bruce Rauner in November would be devastating for Illinois schools.

His budget would slash funding for education by $4 billion, which would force schools to lay off one in every six teachers.

One out of every six teachers: fired -- when we need to be hiring more good teachers and strengthening our schools.

With only 69 days until Election Day, we all need to step up to make sure Bruce Rauner never gets the chance to make his reckless plan for our schools a reality.

Chip in $5 or more before Sunday's critical fundraising deadline to keep Rauner's cuts out of our classrooms.

Rauner has been trying to keep voters in the dark about his plans for Illinois, because he knows how unpopular they would be.

His plan would have devastating consequences for middle-class families, teachers, and students.

Governor Quinn, on the other hand, knows the value of a good education, and he's working to make sure every child in Illinois has access to one -- from Pre-K all the way through college.

There's more work to do, which is why he's calling for Illinois's largest-ever investment in education, including a $6 billion increase in classroom spending over the next five years.

If you're standing with the governor who's fighting for students and teachers in Illinois, donate $5 before Sunday:

Thank you,

Carrie

We are going to rehash essentially the stuff we talked with him on the 30th, give some updates and talk about a communications center to help our campaigns. Would love to have you there, but much more important that we get up there Monday or Tuesday the 16th or 17th and see what his appetite is for changing voting.

I cant watch again now on train and I forget the script exactly but it suggested they walked away with billions from havng done illegal and immoral lending. Cant remember if they used word subprime.

I did skim some news clips and it appears default rates on their stuff was high (herb says not more so than others) and the losses were key to almsot wachovia failure -- athough herb emphasizes that they were only one of the institutions problems. so we should try to understand these facts and get them right in pushback.

I reached out to martin eakes too and will try to reach him. In some ways they (esp their california office) are most knowledgable and in best position to say what characteristics of golden west portfolio was and why this was unfair. Not sure their comfort zone.

Did herb sound like he' d' talked to martin?

I suspect there is a movement of wachovia employees who are angry and may be driving some of this.

For some reason I lost audio on my laptop. So I haven't heard what they said in the skit. Were they portrayed as subprime lenders? They didn't do any subprimes. I did see should be shot label. Talked to Herb. They are obviosly upset. Weird that snl should pick them out. They did soros too so maybe this is one of those right wing writers ala ABC 9/11.

At any rate, we should figure out a way to push back.

My impression had always been that while world savings/golden west led in the area of adjustible rate mortgages they did so with pretty conservative underwriting and underwrote to the fully indexed rate. That is certainly not the impression on gets from the current media and I tried to figure out how i know that and i cant find anything to that effect in a quick review. Whatever the case there, given their role in CRL and advocacy for sound underwriting practices the charactchure (sp?) is unfair.

Subject: Hillary Clinton's New College Compact (plus other exciting content you can share!)

<image001.png>

This week, Hillary Clinton announced her plan to confront the student debt crisis and rein in college costs , called the New College Compact. Key editorials and voices from the early states are praising her vision for transforming American higher education—take a look at the reviews and help share the facts about her plan:

> New York Times Editorial: Democrats Offer Ways to Make College Affordable
> "Mrs. Clinton's plan aims to reduce college costs for students by giving federal grants to states and colleges and by allowing borrowers to refinance their student loans at lower interest rates. It would reward states that agree to spend more money on higher education and give more money to colleges that reduce expenses, though it does not say what kind of costs should be lowered. It also includes a good proposal put forward by President Obama in January to make two-year community colleges free to all Americans. The plan would cost $350 billion over 10 years, which is close to what the federal government currently spends on Pell Grants. Those grants will continue. Ms. Clinton would raise the money by capping unspecified deductions wealthy families can take on their income taxes."
> Kansas City Star Editorial: Hillary Clinton hits the right notes with college affordability plan
> "Clinton's $350 billion plan borrows some of the best ideas from both the left and the right.

Whether a President Hillary Clinton could deliver the plan without a Democratic Congress — or even with one — is an open question, but she is certainly promoting some worthwhile ideas."

Slate : The Big, Bold Idea at the Heart of Hillary Clinton's Plan to Make College Cheaper
"Clinton's plan is studded with other proposals that, on their own, are smart, ambitious, and in some cases controversial. To discourage schools from loading students with too much debt, for instance, she would fine institutions whose graduates can't pay back their loans, a currently bipartisan idea known as "skin-in-the-game" that would make much of the higher-ed world howl in protest. She would further crack down on the for-profit education industry, which has many friends in Congress. She would massively simplify the Department of Education's income-based repayment programs, which cap what student debtors have to pay each month as a percentage of their paycheck and forgive the balance after a period of time, and make the new version open to all borrowers. […] But again, what makes Clinton's idea worth getting excited about isn't the laundry list of decent to great policy proposals it offers. Rather, it's the fact that the leading Democratic presidential candidate has recognized the need to revamp the broken relationship between the federal government, states, and colleges if we want to have any hope of making public higher education sustainably affordable."

BIG ENDORSEMENTS
Former Iowa Senator Tom Harkin in the Des Moines Register : Clinton shares my values on social and economic justice
"She has been a tireless advocate for women and families since I first met her. As First Lady of the United States she was instrumental in advancing the idea that health care should be a right and not a privilege. As my colleague in the Senate and as Secretary of State, she made women's rights and economic opportunity central to American foreign policy. Hillary has never forgotten who she is fighting for."

Machinists Union Endorses Hillary Clinton for President
"The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAM) today announced it endorsed former U.S. Secretary of State and honorary IAM member Hillary Clinton to be the next president of the United States. Ruth J. Simmons was sworn in as the 18th president of Brown University on July 3, 2001. She also holds an appointment as professor in the Department of Comparative Literature and the Department of Africana Studies. She was president of Smith College from 1995 until the time of her appointment at Brown.

In 1983, after serving as associate dean of the graduate school at the University of Southern California, Simmons joined the Princeton University administration. She remained at Princeton for seven years, leaving in 1990 for two years to serve as provost at Spelman College. Returning to Princeton in 1992 as vice provost, she remained at the university until June 30, 1995. As vice provost she was deputy to the provost and executive secretary of the Priorities Committee, the university's budget committee. In 1993, invited by the president to review the state of race relations on the Princeton campus, Simmons wrote a report that resulted in a number of initiatives that received widespread attention. In 1995 she became president of Smith College, the largest women's college in the United States, where she launched a number of strategic initiatives to strengthen the college's academic programs and inaugurated the first engineering program at a U.S. women's college.

Simmons is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and a member of the American Philosophical Society, and the Council on Foreign Relations. She is president of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges an honorary fellow at Selwyn College at Cambridge University. She serves on a number of boards, including the Howard University Board of Trustees, Texas Instruments, and the Goldman Sachs Group. Active in a wide range of educational, charitable, and civic endeavors, she holds honorary degrees from numerous colleges and universities, including Amherst College, Howard University, Dillard University, Princeton University, Lake Forest College, University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Dartmouth College, Boston University, Northeastern University, New York University, University of Pennsylvania, Mount Holyoke College, Washington University in St. Louis, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, George Washington University, Columbia University, Harvard University, Ewha Womens College, University of Southern California, Tougaloo College, Jewish Theological Seminary, University of Toronto, Providence College, Bard College, University of Vermont, Morehouse College, and Spelman College.

In 2004 she received the ROBIE Humanitarian Award, given by the Jackie Robinson Foundation; the Eleanor Roosevelt Val-Kill Medal; and the chairman's award of the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation. She was selected as a Newsweek "person to watch" and as a Ms. Woman of the Year in 2002. In 2001 Time magazine named her America's best college president. In 2007, she was named one of U. S. News & World Report's top U.S. leaders and — for the second time — a Glamour magazine Woman of the Year.

In recent years Simmons, an articulate spokesperson and writer, has written and delivered papers or presentations on a wide array of educational and public policy issues, including institutional governance, foreign language study, diversity, liberal arts, science education, leadership, and women in higher education. Among numerous educational institutions and national forums, she has been a featured speaker at the White House, the World Economic Forum, the National Press Club, the Association of American Universities, and the American Council on Education. In September 2001 ABC News tapped her to serve as a respondent during its live telecast following President Bush's address to Congress.

During her tenure at Brown University, Simmons has created an ambitious set of initiatives designed to expand and strengthen the faculty; increase financial support and resources for undergraduate, graduate, and medical students; improve facilities; renew a broad commitment to shared governance; and ensure that diversity informs every dimension of the university. These initiatives have led to a major investment of new resources in Brown's educational mission.

As an academic leader, Simmons believes in the power of education to transform lives. She champions the university as a haven of reasoned debate with the responsibility to challenge students intellectually and prepare them to become informed, conscientious citizens. She has spent her career advocating for a leadership role for higher education in the arena of national and global affairs.

Subject:	five women

Dear John,

Here are some sad statistics:

- I am one of just 17 women in the Senate.
- Just 17% of all members of Congress are women.
- There are currently only six women governors in the US today.
- Fewer than 25% of state legislature seats are filled by women.

These are trends we absolutely must reverse. That is why I created Off The Sidelines, to mobilize women and make their voices heard. The best way to make sure our values are represented is if we run and win.

That's what I did in '06 and what Kathy Hochul did this year. And that's what five strong Democratic women are doing in the Wisconsin recall elections against Scott Walker's allies next Tuesday – just four days away.

Five amazing women need your immediate support in the final hours to win on Tuesday. It's time to get off the sidelines.

Click here to rush a contribution to these five extraordinary women on ActBlue. They're fighting back in Wisconsin, and it's time for us to get off the sidelines and win.

I couldn't be more pleased that out of the six recall elections against Republicans in Wisconsin next week, five of the Democratic candidates are women. If they all win, the percentage of the Wisconsin state senate that are women will rise from around 25% to a third. That is the very essence of getting off the sidelines.

If you're not familiar with these women, please take a moment to get to know them below:

Nancy Nusbaum, former President of Wisconsin NARAL and former Mayor of DePere, WI, is running against Rob Cowles in WI-SD-02.

Sandy Pasch, a member of the Wisconsin state Assembly since 2008, is running against Alberta Darling in WI-SD-08.

Shelly Moore, a former high school teacher who was elected to the National Education Association (NEA) Board of Directors in 2005, is running against Sheila Harsdorf in WI-SD-10.

Jessica King, Deputy Mayor of Oshkosh, WI, is running against Randy Hopper in WI-SD-18.

Jennifer Shilling, a Wisconsin State Assemblywoman since 2000, is running against Dan Kapanke in WI-SD-32.

With under a week until the recall elections, now is the time to contribute whatever you can to these five excellent candidates. Not only will your support help ensure that Democrats retake the Wisconsin State Senate and block Governor Walker's extreme agenda, but it will increase the representation of women in Wisconsin government.

I truly hope that in 2012, we will see a resurgence in women's participation at all levels of public life. Let's kickstart that resurgence this year by helping to elect these five women to the state Senate in Wisconsin.

Subject: CNN Reports "Sestak ... is not backing down ... against Specter"

Dear John,

CNN reports our Senate race is one of top races in the nation stating:

- "Sestak ... is not backing down ... against Specter."

CNN describes us as tapping into:

- "a frustrated Democratic base, which has been voting against Specter since he was first elected to the Senate as a Republican in 1980."

Please support Democratic Party principles. Please contribute $25, $50, $75, $100, $250 to the Democratic base.

There is a real disconnect between the Washington, DC establishment and Democrats in Pennsylvania. With each passing week, as we've climbed in the polls, we've heard it. We've seen it. There is a visible, increasing crescendo by Pennsylvania Democrats that an injustice has been rendered upon us.

Congressman Barney Frank, Chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, said it best in endorsing us and speaking of the Washington, DC establishment:

- "They are mistaken ... given the strength of a candidate like Joe Sestak ... Joe will be a reliable vote for Pennsylvania's next generation instead of having the same loyal Bush Republican we've seen over the past generation ... it did not do our profession any good for someone to announce that he switched parties purely so he could survive ... Joe has a genuine commitment to Democratic principles ... he is a man committed in an effective way for the things that Democratic Party stands for at its best."

Pennsylvania Democrats did not ask for Arlen. Pennsylvania Democrats did not seek out Arlen. Pennsylvania Democrats do not want Arlen ... whom we've been voting against all these years.

As Lyndon Johnson said, "the vote is the most powerful instrument ever devised by man for breaking down injustice" ... and that powerful instrument will soon be unleashed by the Democratic base, but we need your financial support to do so.

We urge you to please support our campaign, a true Democratic Campaign, by making a contribution to help us unleash the most powerful instrument. Otherwise, next November, it will be Arlen versus Pat Toomey for the "GOP nomination" ... and not the general election.

Warmly,

Joe

P.S. And thanks again to Barney for calling us "a true Democrat ... a genuine commitment to Democratic principles ... a credibility that is unmatched ... one of the most valuable members of Congress."

Hi all,
It's really late on the east coast but as someone who works in the media, I would be remiss if I didn't say one more time that keeping President Clinton on the plane may very well invite a whole shit- storm of speculation and chatter that you may not want.

I'm fairly certain that he'd be fine with not saying anything, but to have him stay on the plane is just awkward.

Obviously, the most important thing to all of us is to reunited with the girls, but from a public standpoint, I just think it would be so much cleaner to see Pres.Clinton, and thank him.

In the end, it's not my call, but I feel compelled to put it out there again because I'm programmed to think about possible consequences of public appearances.

Thanks everyone for EVERYTHING!!!

Kurt,

Absolutely. Cheryl and Jake, very happy to have you on the call.

Just to loop everyone in -- we're going to touch base at 2:00 PM ET today. The goal is to discuss the logistics of a wheels down in the US, how we want this to look, etc... Please do not share this call in number with folks beyond this email chain unless we first get consent from Cheryl and Denis McDonough at the WH (we can do that through me or by connecting with him directly).

Call in #: 202-395-6392

Below is what Robert Gibbs said about NK at this morning's gaggle.

I can be reached at 202-456-1386 or cell is 202-503-5359.

Best,

Tommy

MR. GIBBS: Before we -- we've got between 10 and 15 minutes -- I just want to say at the outset, I know you guys have 400 questions about this. We've put out a statement about the former President being in North Korea and won't have anything to add to it for a while. I'm happy to listen to your questions, but that's the extent of the information that we're going to provide at this point.

Q Why not? (Laughter.)

MR. GIBBS: See previous statement.

Q Any idea how long he'll be there?

Q Why is it a secret?

MR. GIBBS: It's a little sensitive.

Q Pardon?

MR. GIBBS: I think obviously we're talking about something that's extremely sensitive.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Q Any idea how long he'll be there? Okay, it was worth a shot.

Q Did he get permission to go or did he cross the border?

Q Short gaggle this morning, huh? (Laughter.)

MR. GIBBS: Well-phrased. I like the hiking reference that Helen made -- she gets as many questions as she wants.

Yes, ma'am.

Q Is it fair to say if the journalists are brought back safely, we'll get all our questions answered about behind-the-scenes?

MR. GIBBS: I don't ever think I'm going to meet the threshold of answering all your questions, regardless of who comes back from where.

Q But you'll give us some insight into the President's involvement?

MR. GIBBS: We will have more to say on this hopefully later on.

Q Is he in a government plane, a U.S. government plane?

MR. GIBBS: It's a private mission.

Are you guys done? (Laughter.)

Q Is it true that -- there are reports from the region that he was apparently carrying a message from the President to the North Koreans.

MR. GIBBS: That's not true.

Good morning, California.

Lisa, I'm introducing here Dan Rosenthal, who is an experienced advance person for President Clinton, based in LA, who has volunteered to help make the arrival tomorrow morning smooth. State Dept sent me out here basically for the same purpose, and to be of help to you and Laura and Lisa's families however I can. Linda McFadyen from Consular Affairs is also here, for consular support if needed. I have also copied Tommy Vietor of the White House public affairs office, who will guide us on what the White House would like things to look like.

I am in the Marriott next to Burbank Airport. State is working with the Secret Service and TSA to try to get permission to land here rather than LAX. One issue remaining is arranging customs and immigration.

I am going to meet Ken Seals from AvJet, the charter company, at 9:00 a.m. to look at their hangar and facilities and consider things. Apparently they have done high-profile media things at their hangar before. After all, we are close to Hollywood. I suggest that after that we get together to discuss. I can go to your place or we can meet over here near the airport.

Below is the statement issued by the White House this morning -- basically waiting to elaborate on anything until the mission is complete. So far our allies in Japan and South Korea have also been restrained in their commentary, which is useful.

Cheers, KT

John --

Sheldon Adelson, the conservative billionaire Las Vegas casino owner, has pledged to give up to $100 million -- whatever it takes -- to defeat Barack Obama.

We know it's not out of love for Mitt Romney, so why part with so much money? As President Clinton reminded us last week, sometimes the answer is as simple as arithmetic.

So let's do the math: According to a new report from the Center for American Progress Action Fund, Adelson could see up to $2 billion in savings under Mitt Romney's tax plan versus the President's plan. That's how much Romney's policies would favor millionaires and billionaires.

If Mitt Romney wins -- $2 billion more for Adelson. If Barack Obama wins, millionaires and billionaires pay their fair share.

It's a highly cynical but straightforward calculation.

I know you care about this campaign -- you've already done so much to help move us toward victory this November. Now I'm asking you to take one step further.

Donate $5 or more, and let's make sure this election is decided by millions of Americans, not a handful of billionaires.

Here's how it would work for Adelson in a Romney-Ryan administration:

-- Romney would keep in place the Bush tax cuts, and cut Adelson's income taxes by an additional 20 percent. Adelson savings: $1.5 million per year on income he earns as CEO.
-- Romney's plan eliminates taxes on foreign profits like the ones Adelson makes on his Asian casinos. Adelson savings: $1.2 billion.
-- Romney's plan maintains the current low tax rate on dividends. Adelson savings: $120 million per year.
-- Romney's plan removes the estate tax. Adelson heirs save: $8.9 billion.

I honestly can't think of a more straightforward contrast in this election.

We don't have Sheldon Adelson, and with all due respect, we don't want him.

We're relying on more than 3 million grassroots donors, who are giving an average of $58.

Donate $5 or more today and let's win our way:

Global Climate Change and U.S. Law

Second Edition

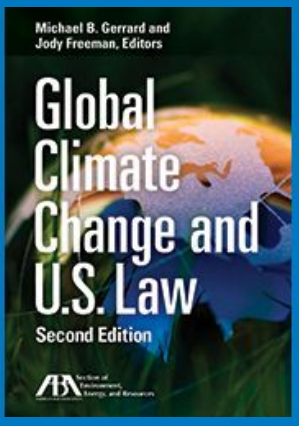
Current and comprehensive guide to the laws governing climate change

Global Climate Change and U.S. Law, Second Edition

Michael B. Gerrard and Jody Freeman, Editors

The first edition of Global Climate Change and U.S. Law, published in 2007, quickly became the standard reference work in its field. Much has happened since then. This new Second Edition is completely updated, and most of it is entirely new. It is a comprehensive guide to the U.S. legal aspects of a problem that is enormous in both its complexity and its importance. This new edition :



- Brings together many of the country's leading environmental lawyers and scholars who provide balanced, readable, and current information
- Adds a completely new Part on energy regulation, plus new chapters on cap-and-trade regimes, climate-related water issues, agriculture and forestry, and the use of non-climate international agreements
- Offers insights on the next legal frontiers, including issues such as climate adaptation, carbon capture and sequestration and geoengineering
- And much more

"Gerrard and Freeman have assembled a marvelous guide through this legal thicket. Not only do they and their chapter authors illuminate what is already in place, but they also help identify the sorts of legal innovations that need to be adopted if we are to avoid the worst effects of climate change."
Lisa Jackson, Former Administrator, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency

"This balanced and readable book is the best existing single source reference on the subject. The principal editors are two of the leading scholars in the nation, and the individual chapters are authored by experts in their particular subject matters. Responding to climate change will require more than scientific advances; legal innovation and creative legal institutions are needed. This exceptional book sets us on the path towards that goal."
John Cruden, President, Environmental Law Institute

What HRC said in 2014:

MS. AMANPOUR: So, do you believe — hard choice — would you take this out of the chain of command?

MS. CLINTON: Well, I supported my friend Kirsten Gillibrand, and she wanted to take it out of the chain of command.

MS. AMANPOUR: Yes, she did.

MS. CLINTON: And remember it's not only women, it's men, who've been assaulted as well.

MS. AMANPOUR: That's what I said, but mostly women.

MS. CLINTON: Mostly women, that's right.

And she was — she was a fierce advocate for it. It was not successful this time around. Another approach was taken. But I think everybody on both sides of the aisle knows, if there is not evidence that this other approach is working, then we should go back to Kirsten's proposal.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

STATEMENT ON HIV AND AIDS

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I said something inaccurate when speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. I made a mistake, plain and simple.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.

We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This issue is important to me. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with about 50,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, almost 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. That is absolutely inexcusable.

I believe there's even more we can – and must – do together. For starters, let's continue to increase HIV and AIDS research and invest in the promising innovations that research is producing. Medications like PrEP are proving effective in preventing HIV infection; we should expand access to that drug for everyone, including at-risk populations. We should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide healthcare to those with HIV and AIDS. We should call on states to reform outdated and stigmatizing HIV criminalization laws. We should increase funding for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses and drug costs, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge patients by jacking up the price of lifesaving medications.

We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them and to future generations to continue that fight together. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. As president, I promise you that I will not let up until we reach that goal. We will not leave anyone behind.

And I think they are looking for more of an explanation, as Teddy mentioned, because they are just so dumbfounded by the comment. But agree that it can then be an opportunity for HRC to talk about her policy agenda for an AIDS free generation, etc.

Have floated this idea in a couple of places, but putting it on this thread as well--we have two places online that we could respond to in terms of digital organizing perspective. There is an Out for Hillary group with 14k members that I think some kind of extended engagment over this would be helpful--an AMA with Dominic/ Robby/Dennis, a special Note (which is a long form format over Facebook), re-purposing the Medium piece there, etc would go a long way. Our other option is Reddit, which has an extremely vocal core of LGBT members, but I would prioritize this Facebook group, which is the largest LGBT community of Hillary's supporters I know. These are friendlies, they are already carrying water for us making sure the apology is out there, and they firmly sit in groups 1 and 2 that Dom identified.

Whatever we did to send our LGBT talking points to folks has really worked, they are popping up everywhere on the supporter Facebook groups.

Hi all,

I wanted to start a new thread to give a brief update about what I'm hearing from folks and get up to speed on how we're thinking of responding in the short and long term. (Sending to a smaller group from yesterday's call but please do loop in others who should be a part of this convo.)

First, as you can imagine, most people are expressing palpable anger and hurt over the comments. I won't belabor the point because I'm sure we all fielded calls, texts, tweets in the last 24 hours over this. But suffice to say, we aren't in a good place with the community right now.

If I had to break things down, I'd put people into three categories: 1) supporters who were horrified at the comment but accept the apology; 2) supporters who are angry and can only be mollified with a longer statement, tv appearance, roundtable, or something else big that shows she "gets it." They will continue to make hay in the meantime; and 3) Bernie folks who are happy to have a new line of attack.

What concerns me is that in that second group are a lot folks from Queer Nation, ACT UP, and other activists who are out, loud, and not afraid of direct action or aggressive confrontation. Given that, I'd love if we could build on yesterday's response -- and quickly. I don't want this to fester.

I assume we're prepping an answer for tomorrow's town hall, but has there been talk in the office of doing more today?

Looking ahead, is it possible to bump up an HIV / AIDS policy rollout? Is there any interest in putting a roundtable conversation or OTR together? (Robbie Kaplan has already volunteered GMHC.)

Would love to know where your heads are at and to be a part of the conversation today about next steps and moving forward.

Paul et al- We've reworked the Obama message into the survey, as requested. But on the list of negative facts we need to cut ONE since we separated out gay adoption and his use of cocaine. Please send your suggestions. Thanks!

❑ 1 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) was the only candidate at a recent event not to cover his heart during the national anthem and he has stopped wearing an American flag pin.
❑ 2 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) benefited from a land deal from a contributor who has been indicted for corruption.
❑ 3 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) would personally negotiate with the leaders of terrorist nations like Iran and North Korea without preconditions.
❑ 4 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) voted against allowing people to use handguns to defend themselves against intruders.
❑ 5 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) plans to raise taxes by 180 (one hundred and eighty) billion dollars a year to pay for his government-run health care plan
❑ 6 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) voted repeatedly against emergency funding bills for U.S. troops in Iraq and Afghanistan.
❑ 7 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh)'s father was a Muslim and Obama grew up among Muslims in the world's most populous Islamic country.
❑ 8 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) is ranked as one of the ten most liberal members of the Senate because of his support of issues like gay adoption.
❑ 9 (Other)
❑ 10 (All)
❑ 11 (None)
❑ 12 (Don't know/refused)
❑ 13 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) voted against requiring medical care for aborted fetuses who survive the procedure.
❑ 14 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) supports giving driver's licenses to undocumented immigrants
❑ 15 Obama (owe-BAHM-uh) described his former use of cocaine as using "a little blow."

Several issues:

1. I think gay adoption belongs with the "liberal" hit on Obama, but "a little blow" does not. "A little blow" needs to be tested on its own.

2. This means we have to cut one Obama negative. Suggestions?

3. I think we need a more accurate tax attack on Obama. The $180 billion tax hike for health care is only the beginning. Obama also supports raising the cap on Social Security taxes, which would be a tax increase of $1.3 trillion over ten years. [See factcheck.org, citing data from Cato Institute and Citizens for Tax Justice http://www.factcheck.org/clinton_vs_obama.html Obama will also be attacked for Charlie Rangel's "mother of all tax reforms," which the GOP says will be a $1 trillion tax increase. Hello-

As for the timing of this poll, are there any more thoughts on fielding tomorrow versus holding off? Or is the consensus to wait for tonight's results?

Tom-- Do you think we can do a quick call today with you in order to discuss the implications for the upcoming research and timeline for the ads?

Will Republicans have guts to block Obama nomination of new Supreme Court justice to replace Justice Antonin Scalia?

Larry Klayman and Freedom Watch Mourn Justice's Ill-Timed, Mysterious Death

(Washington, D.C., February 13, 2016). Today, upon receiving news of the inexplicable and ill-timed death of Justice Antonin Scalia, a conservative icon, Larry Klayman, founder of Judicial Watch and Freedom Watch, a former federal prosecutor in the Reagan Justice Department who was on the trial team that broke up AT&T and candidate in 2004 for U.S. Senate in Florida in the Republican Primary, issued this statement:

"Freedom Watch and all Americans mourn the death of Justice Antonin Scalia, who seemed relatively young for a justice, robust and in good health, not only because he was a great patriot who loved the country, but also because his loss will result in the socialist and Muslim-leaning and race divisive current President nominating a new justice of his ilk. If such a likely appointment is ever confirmed in the U.S. Senate, this will help cement the current downward spiral of the nation. It now falls upon the Republican establishment in the U.S. Senate to block any confirmation of a new justice until after the elections. Will they have the guts to do this? Not likely under the current leadership of the Republican Party in Congress, who have been submissive to and thus roundly defeated by President Barack Hussein Obama at every turn.

Freedom Watch and I will do our part to prevent the confirmation of any Obama appointed nominee to the Supreme Court. For the moment, let us all pay our tribute to this great American, whose ill-timed mysterious death needs to be investigated."

Subject: Your chance to vote NOW

Dear John,

This fall, you'll get the chance to vote for environmental progress at the local, state and national levels – and if you're like me you have high hopes for what we can accomplish this election. But you don't have to wait until November to cast your vote for the environment.

CREDO Mobile, a phone service from Working Assets, is holding its own election. CREDO Mobile supports the causes you care about like peace, the environment, economic equality and voting rights. Since 1985 those donations have added up to $60 million. In fact, they've been helping fund The League of Conservation Voters Education Fund with a share of their revenues since 1998.

As a CREDO member, you can cast your vote today and decide where the donation money goes – and I don't mind saying that I hope you vote for LCV Education Fund. Click here to cast your ballot for LCV Education Fund (located under the Voting Rights & Civic Participation section).

Not yet a member of the CREDO community? You can learn more below about CREDO Mobile. Hear them out - I think you'll be impressed.

If you decide that you're ready to make the switch , CREDO Mobile makes it easy – you'll get a free phone, plus they'll pay your early termination fees, up to $200.* Even better, you'll get a chance to vote for LCV Education Fund in CREDO's election.

Thank you for all you do for LCV, and for supporting companies that share our values.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski
League of Conservation Voters Education Fund

Dear Fellow Environmentalist:

I'm Michael Kieschnick, co-founder and president of CREDO Mobile and board member of The League of Conservation Voters Education Fund. As an environmental activist, you know that everyday choices matter. Registering to vote. Contacting your representatives. Donating money to environmental causes.

You probably are equally thoughtful about your choices in consuming and saving, whether it is the car you use, the lights you install, or the food you eat.

Have you considered adding your cellphone service to this list? Because who you choose as a mobile phone provider can be just as important a choice as switching lightbulbs or finally getting that hybrid.

CREDO Mobile, a service of Working Assets, is without a doubt the greenest phone company around. We have donated over $10 million over the years to great environmental groups, including the League of Conservation Voters Education Fund. Our phone recycling program has already kept over 22,000 phones out of landfills. Our own activism program has helped to stop 30 coal-fired power plants in just the last year. And through our commitment to replace any paper we used, we've planted nearly 2.5 million trees around the globe. Hard to imagine any other phone company joining us in these efforts. With CREDO Mobile, it's easy to be green.

As an environmental activist, you know that the Bush/Cheney administration has done more environmental damage and faster than any other. Ever.

But did you know that if you use AT&T for your phone service, your monthly bills go into the coffers of a company whose political action committee was a maximum contributor to Bush/Cheney in both 2000 and 2004? And I bet they did not ask you if you agreed!

Which is why we say your mobile phone is not a neutral choice. The other part is that, unlike some products, there is a choice: CREDO Mobile.

By switching your cellphone provider to CREDO Mobile, you can make sure your monthly fees are being used in support of your values, not the Bush/ Cheney machine. If environmental values are important to you, if you think progressive values are important, then it's time to think about CREDO Mobile. It's a simple choice that can make a big impact.

* Sanyo S1

Join today!

Switch now and we'll pay your early termination fee (up to $200.)* This offer is only available online so go to credomobile.com to learn more about making the switch. Be sure to use your offer code 500174.

Sincerely,

Michael Kieschnick

CREDO Mobile

P.S. In case you're wondering, you'll get the same quality coverage, phones and accessories with CREDO Mobile that you enjoy from any major provider. Sign up today and we'll give you a FREE Sanyo S1 ($199 value) with no shipping or activation charges when you join.

* All with a two-year CREDO Mobile service agreement. Offer subject to credit qualification. Contract buyout: We'll credit your CREDO Mobile account (up to $200) 30 days after we receive a copy of your prior carrier's termination fee charges; details to follow by mail. Vox: “America just got its first glimpse at Hillarynomics — here's what it looks like”

By Matthew Yglesias

January 16, 2015, 1:51 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton's years-long 2016 presidential un-campaign has created a curious informational void. Over her several decades in the public eye, she's become perhaps the most-covered figure in the political scene. But her lack of meaningful opposition for the 2016 Democratic nomination combined, with the general exhaustion of the party's agenda in the waning days of the Obama administration, leaves us with little idea of how should we actually govern as president. Until now, that is.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A 160-page white paper from a think tank titled "Report of the Commission on Inclusive Prosperity" is not exactly designed to set the world ablaze. But the timing and circumstance of its authorship make it the best guide to what Hillarynomics is likely to look like.

In some ways, it defies stereotypes of the Clintons as standard-bearers for neoliberal centrism — endorsing fiscal stimulus and a strong pro-labor union agenda, while downplaying the strong education-reform streak of the Obama administration. But it's also notable for the Obama-era liberal ambitions it pushes aside. There's no cap-and-trade or carbon tax in here, no public option for health care, and no effort to break up or shrink the largest banks. Nor is there an ambitious agenda to tackle poverty.

Instead, you get a multi-pronged push to boost middle-class incomes. After an extended period in which Democratic Party politics has been dominated by health care for the poor, environmental regulation, and internecine fights about Wall Street, Hillarynomics looks like back-to-basics middle-class populism. It should in many ways further infuriate Clinton's left-wing intellectual critics — and then further infuriate them by turning out to be an agenda that makes the party's voting base perfectly happy.

Why the Commission on Inclusive Prosperity matters

White papers are released in Washington all the time. But this one came out under the aegis of the Center for American Progress (where, full disclosure, I once worked), a think tank that has a unique relationship to Hillaryland. Its founder, John Podesta, has already been announced as the chair of her not-yet-extant campaign. Its president, Neera Tanden, was policy director of Clinton's previous presidential campaign.

One of the co-chairs of the Commission is Lawrence Summers. Summers ran the Treasury Department at the end of the Clinton administration, and ran the National Economic Council at the beginning of the Obama administration; only liberal opposition stopped him from chairing the Federal Reserve. He is, in other words, Democrats' go-to guy for economic policy. The other co-chair is even more telling — Ed Balls, the UK Labour Party's Shadow Chancellor of the Exchequer. In other words, Labour is the opposition party now, but Balls is the guy who'll be running UK economic policy if Labour wins the next election. The report offers separate sections for US and UK policy recommendations, but Balls' involvement is a sure sign of how seriously the overall document is meant as a real policy blueprint.

The central challenge of Hillarynomics

[CHART]

The chart above exemplifies the report's framing of the central economic challenge of the era. Across a variety of wealthy countries, incomes for the bottom 90 percent of the population have not kept up with productivity or per capita GDP growth. But there is also considerable variation. The experiences of Canada, Australia, and Sweden show that there is nothing inevitable about income stagnation.

The list of proposed solutions for the US is long, ranging from more infrastructure spending (with new measures to improve project management on federal infrastructure deals), more preschool, closing corporate tax and inheritance tax loopholes, curbing the deductibility of executive pay, a tax cut for middle class workers, more FHA subsidies for riskier loans, and a reiteration of the merits of comprehensive immigration reform.

But the report is especially striking for its endorsement of labor market regulations not normally associated with the Summers wing of Democratic thinking. As David Leonhardt put it, "one theme is that the countries where the middle class has fared better are countries where workers have more power." The document endorses a variety of regulatory changes that would make union organizing easier, and calls for the creation of German-style works councils outside the context of traditional union organizing. It also endorses more favorable tax treatment for worker-owned firms, and proposing "estate tax relief" for corporate founders who convert their companies to worker-owned enterprises when they retire or die.

On the non-wage front, inclusive growth calls for paid (gender-neutral) parental leave, expanded Family and Medical Leave Act eligibility, and universal paid sick days and paid vacation days — all loosely under the banner of increasing women's labor force participation. Clinton has, in the past, field-tested feminist frames as a means of selling big government.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Put it all together, and you see the sketch of a Clinton economic agenda. It has a lot to offer Americans who are employed and not impoverished, but nonetheless struggling with stagnant incomes and a sense of pervasive economic insecurity. Yet many thinkers on the left will find a great deal missing.

On the cutting board

What Hillarynomics does not include is anything like an Elizabeth Warren-style effort to dethrone giant banks from the commanding heights of the American economic system. The authors suggest that the practice of settling bank misconduct claims without an admission of guilt should be "severely curtailed," and offers support for requiring banks to borrow less. But there's no talk of breaking up or shrinking the biggest banks, and no support for the Financial Transaction Tax that House Democrats are lining up behind. Nor is there much of an anti-poverty agenda here — low-income Americans would be helped by some of these proposals, but they are very much not front and center.

Conversely, though the report speaks at length about the value of education, it does so primarily in the frame of liberal-friendly proposals for subsidizing preschool and college. The Obama administration's focus on improving K-12 teacher quality, through moves that are often hostile to the interests of teachers' unions, is nowhere to be found.

Two important leftover items from the Obama-era progressive agenda — charging fees for carbon dioxide emissions and adding a "public option" to the Affordable Care Act — are absent. One could simply plead political realism on these points. But there's frankly no indication that Congress is poised to enact a paid parental leave bill, or a sweeping array of changes to the union organizing process, either. The practical realities of the modern Congress and the contemporary House map mean that almost anything liberals get done for the foreseeable future will have to come through executive action.

You can't get there from here

Clinton is going to have major difficulty engaging her supporters on an emotional level over economic issues. This is in some respects an exciting plan, but lacks a realistic path for enacting it. So who is actually going to feel excited about it?

The Hillarynomics blueprint offers none of the Obama administration's recent emphasis on creative uses of executive power. The text hews very much to a path of policy literalism, and offers no real political theory about how to achieve any of this. Some of that is a matter of focus, but some follows naturally from the heavy emphasis on labor market policy and the de-emphasis on financial and environmental regulation. The core of the agenda is a laser focus on middle-class income, a subject that simply doesn't seem amenable to redress through executive unilateralism.

Figuring out how to craft an economic message that's largely built out of politically unrealistic proposals is outside the scope of this commission's work. But it's a big, difficult question the Clinton camp is going to have to address. Clinton is already more accepted than loved by liberal activists, and there's nothing in this economic plan to change this. So while a crowded Republican primary field gets ready to entertain America and deliver a winner who manages to find a way to stand out from the pack, Clinton is counting more on her iconic status than her agenda to power her forward.

Wall Street Journal blog: Washington Wire: "New Hampshire Liberals: We Still Want Elizabeth Warren"

By Peter Nicholas

January 16, 2015, 11:39 a.m. EST

The Elizabeth Warren-for-President movement rolls on – even though it's by no means clear Ms. Warren is along for the ride.

Liberal supporters of the Massachusetts senator took out full page ads today in two New Hampshire newspapers urging her to jump in the 2016 presidential race.

"Elizabeth Warren, New Hampshire wants you in our primary," reads the ads, which appear in the Union Leader and Concord Monitor.

The ads — underwritten by the group Democracy for America — invite people to a rally Saturday in Manchester, N.H.

Last month, the Draft Warren movement staged a similar event in Iowa, the state that holds the first contest of the 2016 presidential campaign season.

MoveOn.Org, the liberal advocacy group, is hiring staff in Iowa and New Hampshire in an attempt to showcase broad support for Ms. Warren and lure her into the race.

But the clock is ticking and Ms. Warren doesn't seem to be making the moves one would expect of an insurgent preparing to take on the colossus of the Democratic field: Hillary Clinton.

Indeed, in an interview published earlier this week in Fortune magazine, Ms. Warren was asked flatly: "Are you going to run for president."

Her answer was unambiguous and left no wiggle room.

"No," she said.

Politicians often change their minds about such things — See Romney, Mitt. But Ms. Warren can't afford to be coy forever. The Iowa caucuses are a year away and Mrs. Clinton has a huge head start.

Washington Post blog: The Fix: “Here’s how Democrats win back the Senate in 2016. And it’s surprisingly simple.”

By Chris Cillizza and Aaron Blake

January 16, 2015, 1:09 p.m. EST

The Senate map is Democrats' friend in the 2016 cycle. They are defending only 10 seats while Republicans have two dozen of their own seats to hold. But wait, it gets better. Seven of those 24 Republican seats are in states that President Obama won not once but twice: Florida, Illinois, Iowa, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

To win the majority back, Democrats need to win five of those seven seats in November 2016. (If Hillary Clinton, or some other Democrat, wins the White House in 2016, then Senate Democrats need to win only four of those seven. That's the exact path Republicans took to the Senate majority in 2014 when, needing a six-seat gain, they won all six of the states — Alaska, Arkansas, Louisiana, Montana, South Dakota and West Virginia — that Mitt Romney carried in 2012 and were represented by Democrats. (Republicans also won two states — Iowa and Colorado — that Obama carried twice and one, North Carolina, that Obama won in 2008 and Romney won in 2012.)

Of course, 2014 was a historically good year for Senate Republicans. The last time the party won more than nine seats in a midterm election was 1994 when they won 10. Prior to 1994, you have to go all the way back to 1946 when Republicans netted 12 seats.

And, while the map looks great for Democrats on paper, several of those seven races look less rosy in reality. Iowa is a very tough Democratic pickup unless Sen. Chuck Grassley (R) decides to retire, which he insists he isn't going to do. Ohio Sen. Rob Portman is a gifted politician and fundraiser while the Democratic bench in the state is decidedly thin. The Democratic fields in New Hampshire, Florida and Illinois are still quite muddled. And neither Sens. Pat Toomey (Pa.) nor Ron Johnson (Wis.) are political dead men walking. Not yet, at least.

There are also two genuinely vulnerable Democrats — Sens. Harry Reid (Nev.) and Michael Bennet (Colo.) — on the ballot in 2016.

Still, as the 2014 election revealed, the map and the math are huge factors in the battle for the Senate. Both are on Democrats' side this time around.

Below are the 10 most competitive Senate contests on the ballot in 2016. The number-one-ranked race is the most likely to switch parties in 2016.

10. Kentucky (Republican-controlled): Sen. Rand Paul (R) is staffing up, as expected, for a presidential run next year, landing incoming Illinois Gov. Bruce Rauner's (R) campaign manager, Chip Englander, as his campaign manager and installing Doug Stafford as a top adviser, among other well-known GOP consultants. Paul still has to figure out how he's going to run for president and hold his Senate seat if that former race doesn't work out. His opponent in that effort could be none other than Alison Lundergan Grimes, given her role as Kentucky's chief elections officer. (Previous ranking: 10)

9. Ohio (R): Ohio is a swing state. But Portman isn't seen as particularly vulnerable in 2016. A lot of that is because he banked $5.8 million by the end of 2014. Another big reason is Democrats have a very slim bench in Ohio. Among the names mentioned are Cincinnati Councilman P.G. Sittenfeld, former governor Ted Strickland, former congresswoman Betty Sutton and Rep. Tim Ryan. A Strickland comeback would be particularly interesting, but he passed on a rematch with Gov. John Kasich (R) in 2014. (Previous ranking: 8)

8. Florida (R): Whither Marco Rubio? The Florida senator could be the odd man out in the presidential race, with fellow Floridian Jeb Bush and other establishment-friendly candidates like Mitt Romney and Chris Christie in the mix. Consider this: Rubio is just 43 years old, and he's got his 2016 reelection campaign to worry about. Perhaps it's better to focus on staying in the Senate and waiting for the next opportunity. If he runs, he'll be favored. And Republicans would be happy to see him stay focused on the Senate. (Previous ranking: 9)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

7. New Hampshire (R): The massive question here is what Gov. Maggie Hassan (D) does. Democrats think there's a pretty decent chance she'll run against Sen. Kelly Ayotte (R), but a New England College poll showed Ayotte leading that matchup by five points. Hassan, for what it's worth, would have to give up her job to run for the Senate; New Hampshire governors serve two-year terms. (Previous ranking: 7)

6. Colorado (Democratic controlled): No one though Bennet would even be in the Senate in 2016. After being appointed as a total unknown in 2009, Bennet ran a perfect campaign in 2010 and benefited from the fact that his Republican opponent was not very good. Given Colorado's swinginess, Bennet will be a major Republican target again. But who will Republicans put forward? Rep. Mike Coffman and newly elected state Attorney General Cynthia Coffman are mentioned — they're married — as is Rep. Scott Tipton. None of that trio has the political skills of newly elected Sen. Cory Gardner (R).)(Previous ranking: 5)

5. North Carolina (R): Sen. Richard Burr (R) isn't doing much to inspire confidence in Republicans about his future plans. His fundraising is weak — $720,000 on hand as of the end of September 2014 — and rumors continue to swirl about him not running again in 2016. (Burr has said he plans to run.) If Democrats can convince former senator Kay Hagan (D) to run, this race moves up on the Line. But even if they don't, it's hard to see this not being a very competitive race in a presidential year. (Previous ranking: 6)

4. Pennsylvania (R): Attorney General Kathleen Kane (D) was once the Democrats' heir apparent opponent for Toomey. She now faces potential criminal charges for allegedly violating the secrecy of a grand jury. This isn't huge news, given these problems have been going on for a while now and her name wasn't really being floated for Senate anymore, but it does reinforce that Democrats have a recruiting question here. The establishment does not want 2010 nominee and former congressman Joe Sestak as its nominee, but Sestak is pretty gung-ho about running again. (Previous ranking: 4)

3. Illinois (R): State Attorney General Lisa Madigan is Democrats' first choice to take on Sen. Mark Kirk (R). But, she has passed up so many winnable races for higher office that it's hard to see why she runs this time. If not Madigan, then Democrats will turn to Rep. Tammy Duckworth or Rep. Bill Foster. Kirk is an excellent fundraiser and knows the seriousness of the challenge he faces. Much depends on the top of the ticket; if the Democratic presidential nominee wins Illinois by 15 points (Obama carried it by 17 points) then it's hard to see a path to victory for Kirk. (Previous ranking: 3)

2. Nevada (D): Reid got knocked down — hard — while working out at his home in Nevada. He got so banged up that he missed the first days of Congress and might not regain vision in his right eye. He said it won't affect his reelection decision. The bigger question is what Gov. Brian Sandoval (R) does. Does he wait for Reid to decide whether to seek reelection? Force his hand? This is a big question in a race Republicans would love to win to stem possible losses elsewhere. Meanwhile, former lieutenant governor Brian Krolicki, who blamed Reid for a 2008 indictment that Krolicki later beat, is considering running. (Previous ranking: 2)

1. Wisconsin (R): Johnson seems entirely unaware of the fact that he won a Democratic-leaning (at the federal level) state in 2010. He had the ninth most conservative record in the Senate, according to National Journal's 2013 vote ratings. Democrats are banking on former Sen. Russ Feingold, who lost to Johnson in 2010, running for his old seat. If Feingold does run, he'll have to run a much better campaign that he did five years ago. If he doesn't run, expect Rep. Ron Kind, who has been itching to run statewide for as long as we can remember, to leap into the race. (Previous ranking: 1)

Johns Hopkins University: “Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley to join Johns Hopkins as visiting professor”

By Dennis O’Shea

Outgoing Maryland governor Martin O'Malley will join the Johns Hopkins University's Carey Business School as a visiting professor focusing on government, business and urban issues.

O'Malley, who on Jan. 21 concludes two terms as the state's chief executive, will participate in classes on such topics as leadership, infrastructure, entrepreneurship, and ethics. He also will work with other faculty members and students on their studies of management in the government sector.

The former Baltimore mayor and city council member will also be a part of Johns Hopkins' 21st century cities initiative, involving faculty members from disciplines across the university to study and propose approaches to issues affecting cities, including economic growth, urban education, violence, urban health, and support for arts and culture.

"The Johns Hopkins Carey Business School is training students to be both business leaders and exemplary citizens who will improve society and increase value for all stakeholders," Dean Bernie Ferrari said. "Gov. O'Malley's wealth of experience and leadership will be a welcome addition to our faculty and in the classroom. We are delighted to have him."

Added Ronald J. Daniels, president of the university: "Gov. O'Malley has devoted his career to bringing data-driven decision-making to tackling our city and state's most complex challenges. His insights and experience will be of enormous benefit to our students and faculty."

O'Malley, who will begin at Johns Hopkins on Feb. 2, is known as an innovator in management for the public sector. He developed a data-driven management system as Baltimore's mayor starting in 1999. The program, called CitiStat, provided leaders with frequent statistical performance updates department-by-department throughout city government, allowing the mayor and his appointees to identify problem areas and fix them.

When he became governor in 2007, O'Malley transferred the concept to the state level, creating StateStat and putting data online so that taxpayers, lawmakers, and researchers could track performance along with the governor, his cabinet, and staff.

O'Malley also incorporated his data-based management philosophy in his BayStat program, monitoring progress in restoring the Chesapeake Bay, and in the Genuine Progress Indicator, an index of economic, social, and environmental indicators measuring quality of life in Maryland. The index advanced 3.27 percent in 2013, the latest year for which full data is available.

"I am honored to join Johns Hopkins University, a world-class institution that has done so much for Baltimore and Maryland," O'Malley said. "As both a mayor and governor, I've worked to make government work better for all of our citizens through a relentless focus on data and transparency. Our efforts got results—driving violent crime down to record lows, recovering 100 percent of the jobs lost during the recession, and restoring the health of the Chesapeake Bay for generations to come. I look forward to sharing management insights from these past two decades with the next generation of leaders at Johns Hopkins."

O'Malley managed Maryland during the recession of 2008 and the subsequent recovery, cutting projected state spending while making strategic investments in education and infrastructure and maintaining the state's AAA bond ratings. He worked to raise the state's minimum wage to $10.10 by 2018; has promoted renewable energy, the restoration of the bay, and reductions in greenhouse gas emissions; and signed into law same-sex marriage equality in Maryland and a state-level version of the Dream Act providing access to public higher education for immigrants.

Conservatives Defend Insurers With Track Record Of Exploiting Seniors

Today, More and More Early Retirees Are At The Mercy Of Insurance Companies – Who Can Charge Them As Much As 11 Times More For Coverage.

- The number of employers offering insurance to early retirees has fallen by half in the last 20 years – shifting more and more early retirees into the individual market, where they are at the mercy of the insurance companies.
    - Even those who continue to receive insurance through their employers are seeing their benefits get reduced .
- On the individual market, insurers can charge early retirees as much as 11 times more than younger people for the same coverage – this process is called "age rating." (Reformers in Congress are trying to rein in this practice, but insurers are lobbying furiously to preserve their leeway to charge early retirees exponentially more.)
- And in the vast majority of states (41 states), there is no limit on how much insurance companies can charge early retirees for individual premiums.

Once Seniors Are Eligible For Medicare, Insurers Take Advantage Of Them Through Medicare Advantage.

- Insurance companies have a long track record of trying to take advantage of seniors through the Medicare Advantage program – which is a windfall for insurance company profits.
- Fully two-thirds of insurance companies who provide coverage through Medicare Advantage have been cited for violations related to how they enroll or deal with beneficiaries. [Tampa Tribune, 6/27/07]
- For example, WellPoint, one of the nation's largest insurers, was sanctioned for overcharging beneficiaries, failing to provide them with the drugs they need, and posing "a serious threat to the health and safety of Medicare beneficiaries."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- In Florida, WellCare was forced to pay $90 million to settle claims that it artificially boosted profits by shortchanging $40 million from Florida agencies – including the Florida Healthy Kids Corporation. [Tampa Tribune, 6/30/09]

- In Illinois, Humana was forced to pay half a million dollars in fines for trying to put seniors in "unaffordable or unnecessary programs."

But Despite This Track Record, Opponents Of Reform Are Defending Insurers And Putting Their Interests Ahead Of Seniors.

- Progressives in Congress are trying to shore up Medicare's long-term solvency by cutting wasteful overpayments to insurance companies through Medicare Adv antage – measures that could generate up to $149 billion in savings without affecting benefits, and that have been endorsed by AARP because the current system is "unfair to the majority of beneficiaries who participate in the traditional program."

    - In fact, the overpay ments to insurers through the Medicare Advantage program have actually resulted in higher premiums for beneficiaries in traditional Medicare, and contributed to Medicare's long-term financial challenge.

- But instead of looking out for seniors, conservatives are rushing to defend insurance companies and their profits – despite insurers' long track record of taking advantage of seniors.

- For instance – in response to reports that Humana is intentionally misleading seniors about health care reform, Sen. Mitch McConnell (who has received almost $100,000 from Humana) rushed to the Senate floor to defend Humana. In the House, Minority Leader John Boehner also rushed to defend Humana.

- Conservatives are going so far as to block nominees for key positions in the Department of Health and Human Services in order to allow insurance companies to continue taking advatnage of seniors.

Subject:	State and Local Fiscal Crisis -- Possible Options

John and Rahm --

I hope you both are doing well, and you should feel enormous pride about the tenor, pace, and direction of the first two weeks of the transition.

I am sure you all saw yesterday's front-page NYT piece, http://www.nytimes.com/2008/07/01/us/01taxes.html (and interactive map) regarding the serious and growing budget crisis for most states and many localities. The Times story made several compelling points:

- Many states' mid-year revenue estimates show deep downward spikes that are directly impacting states' current-year FY 09 budgets (creating budget gaps that must be closed immediately by gubernatorial action and/or special legislative sessions in most states).
- Rapidly declining state revenue bases will create very large projected FY10 budget deficits for states to address when virtually all of their legislatures begin to meet in early 2009.
- For all but a few states with relatively strong oil and natural gas revenues, revenues are plunging, and this will lead to layoffs/freezes, program cuts, and/or fee/tax increases -- which will cause real pain and exacerbate the current economic crisis.
- Many localities with weaker credit ratings and deteriorating revenue sources could face credit crunches and fiscal problems by early next year.

As the state/local fiscal problem begins to grow, I thought I might share one or more ideas that the Transition may wish to consider to position the new Administration on this emerging issue:

1. Lower-profile Transition Action: Close-in Advisory Session. Valerie Jarrett and the Transition External Affairs Team may wish to convene a small group of close-in governors (Rendell, etc.), state legislative leaders, mayors, state and local government groups (NGA, USCM, NASBO), and public finance experts (Center on Budget, SUNY-Albany) to (1) track the nature and extent of the emerging public sector fiscal crisis, (2) recommend action steps to the Economic Advisory Group, and (3) help enlist support to state/local fiscal relief in the stimulus or other legislative plans (e.g., increasing Medicaid matching rate). This would send a positive, early signal of interest to state and local officials without unduly raising public expectations for immediate federal relief.
2. Higher-Profile Transition Action: Public Roundtable. President-elect Obama could invite a bi-partisan group of governors, state legislative leaders, local elected officials, public finance experts, and leaders of the major state/local government organizations to (1) brief him and his team about the nature, extent, and severity of the emerging budget gaps and credit crunches facing local government, (2) recommend specific action steps for his transition and incoming administration, and (3) endorse fiscal relief and other measures in the stimulus and/or other proposals. While this option will draw greater attention to state fiscal conditions and potentially accelerate rising demands for near-term federal action, it also permits the President-elect to get in front of this issue and frame the state/local fiscal crisis as a byproduct of the global recession.
3. New Administration Executive Order: Inter-agency Working Group on State and Local Fiscal Crisis. As one of his first executive orders, President Obama could create an inter-agency working group, co-chaired by NEC, DPC, and /or Senior Advisor Jarrett and comprised of key Cabinet secretaries (Treasury, HHS, Education, Labor, etc.), to work closely with governors, state legislative leaders, and local officials to (1) track nature and severity of state and local fiscal crises, (2) recommend Congressional action to provide fiscal relief (as appropriate), and (3) recommend appropriate steps that executive branch agencies could take that would both ameliorate the fiscal crisis and promote the the President's priorities and policy principles (e.g., ensuring access to credit for local government borrowing, preserving health coverage for families losing their jobs, continuing income and child care support for parents seeking employment, and other forms of program flexibility). The Inter-agency Working Group could create a mechanism through which the federal government could explore options for preserving the safety net as economic conditions deteriorate. By consulting with state and local leaders regarding the design and charge of this working group now during the Transition, this option would permit the President-elect to convey his substantive interest in this issue to key state and local officials yet focus immediate attention on future practical steps that the Obama Administration could implement in early 2009.

The foregoing options are not mutually exclusive, but I wanted to share them for consideration by you and your staff.

I know you all are swamped with numerous responsibilities. While I am busy working on the HHS Transition, I would be pleased, of course, to help you or your team explore any of these options.

All the best,

John

two weeks ago when they posited that Microsoft might steal the caucus from them. Now that the caucus is over, they are calling into question the results that were reported by everyday Iowans.

Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus with incredibly high turnout - a level of turnout the Sanders camp claimed would earn them a win. It was a close contest and a hard fought campaign. But Hillary won. And once it became apparent that they had lost, the Bernie Sanders campaign began to peddle frivolous claims that have been disproven in an effort to poison an otherwise historic night for Hillary Clinton, our supporters, and volunteers.

Remember coin flip-gate where people claimed Hillary won all the coin tosses? Turns out that wasn't true. In fact, according to the official count, Sen. Sanders won more coin tosses than Hillary Clinton.

Or how about the "90 precincts" with no chairs? Also untrue. Certainly there were precincts that took a while to report but once they all did, it was clear Hillary had won.

Now the Sanders campaign is disputing the reported results that were sent in by everyday Iowans - volunteers, no less! - to the Democratic Party. All three campaigns have checked the results of certain precincts against their own data reported to them from volunteers. That's normal. For the Sanders campaign's challenges, there are 7 total precincts they are questioning (out of a whopping total 1,681 precincts!) and the Iowa Democratic Party is checking the results on a few more. And they will follow the same standard procedure for these questions as they did for precincts we asked them to look at - they'll look at the numbers reported that night, check the math and figure out if there are any discrepancies or misallocation of delegates.

Here's the kicker. Even if the Sanders campaign were to win all of their challenges - the marginal bump they receive in support would not be enough to overcome Hillary Clinton's win margin. Those are just the facts.

Here's the math.

Total Precincts in Contest: 11 (7 from Sanders and 4 from the Iowa Democratic Party)
Total State Delegates being Contested: 1.7947 (not enough to change outcome)

If every contest were to go in the favor of Sanders:
HRC = -.775
Sanders = +.758
MOM = +.0166

It may be inconvenient for the Sanders campaign that Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus, but it's the truth. Eight years ago Hillary came in third here in Iowa and when she did, she congratulated the winner. We suggest Senator Sanders do the same.

As the campaign increases its focuses on women, keep in mind that there are organizations for women involved in agriculture and there are also national agriculture organizations that have sections devoted to women. American Agri-Women is the largest national organization with tens of thousands of members. Peter Matz is close to them.
www.americanagriwomen.org

The National Farmers Union has a Women's Conference. http://www.nfu.org/nfu-foundation/womens-conference The President of NFU is Roger Johnson; VP is Chandler Goule. Both are good supporters, personally.

The Farm Bureau has a Women's Leadership Section. See: http://www.fb.org/programs/womenscommittee Julie Anna Potts, VP of the Farm Bureau, is a good D and contact person.

Finally, USDA Deputy Secretary Krysta Harden is the point person for women at USDA. I trust she would be delighted to help in her personal capacity.

NOTE: all of these organizations are nonpartisan but reaching out with information and interest is always appropriate.

Happy Holidays. There is only one goal for 2016. Marshall

Are we going to come out for the 15 hourly wage in NY for fast food workers? NYT sorta asking.

Might make our reticence on a federal min wage look more principled if we show we are unafraid to support it in the particular localities where we think it makes sense (as she said in her NH town hall last wk)

Subject: Unequivocal

Dear John,

Let's get real - a lot of people have talked about making a run for the U.S. Senate in New York, with Harold Ford Jr., being the latest. But there's only one candidate who has the progressive values we care about - and the record to match: Kirsten Gillibrand.

Not one of the current contenders - Democrat or Republican - has consistently supported a woman's right to choose like Kirsten has. Not one has made an unequivocal stand in support of marriage equality, and not one has worked tirelessly to repeal the unfair and discriminatory "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy - except for Kirsten.

At a time when so many issues in the Senate are being decided by just a few votes, we can't afford to go backward! It's time to show the pundits and the naysayers that New York wants a progressive champion as its senator.

Click here to make a donation of $250, $500, or more to Kirsten's campaign, and send a powerful message to her opponents that we intend to return her to the Senate in 2011.

In just one year in the Senate, Kirsten has shown herself to be a leader who has the courage to fight for what's right. I remember how proud I was when she raised her voice loud and clear against the Stupak Amendment - one of the most dangerous threats to women's reproductive rights in decades - and helped defeat the Senate version. Her active support of marriage equality and fair treatment of gays in the military shows her unwavering dedication to equal rights for all.

With so much at stake, we need to be very clear that we support candidates who share these ideals- and have shown that they will act on them! That's why we've got to stand firmly behind Kirsten, because she's proven her commitment. There's no time to waste. We need to act now to speak up and make clear that she's our candidate.

Please make a donation today of $250, $500, or more to Gillibrand for Senate, and show your support for a progressive, committed United States Senator.

Over the past year, Kirsten has always been there for us - speaking out, working, leading. Now it's time for us to be there for Kirsten.

Sincerely,

Ann F. Lewis

Yes we have a group focused on this and lobbyists in the states we are most worried about. MArc correct me if I'm wrong but MI is only big one to our knowledge. PA was proposed but died.
The MI lobbyists says that the provision is supposed to be removed due to a agreement to get seem votes but he is monitoring closely.

STATEMENT

I understand that many Americans have questions about the stories they hear on the news about emails and servers. As I said back in March, it clearly would've been better if I'd just used a government email account. Using a personal email account was a mistake, plain and simple. I am committed to doing everything I can to clear up any remaining confusion about this. I WANT PEOPLE TO HAVE THE CHANCE TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THE INCREDIBLE WORK OF THE DEPARTMENT I WAS PROUD TO LEAD. That's why I've asked the State Department to publish 55,000 pages of my work emails. I've also repeatedly offered to answer questions before Congress and I look forward to doing so in October.

One thought on her doing press on Sunday vs Monday: whether the press wants to cover it or not, we have pretty hefty policy to roll out on Monday, so if we get this out of the way Sunday, the policy gives us a nice way to move forward. We could even have her come out against Keystone on Monday as well (not sure where that stands), which will solicit criticism but that might help distract from emails. Kind of like bundling taxes, health, and email last Friday.

In any case, I would vote for having her address this Sunday, so we can legitimately claim she's trying to move on and address what voters care about on Monday.

It's a good statement. Two suggestions.

1) I can see why you might not want to say who the turnover was to, but it seems to me omitting this may be misinterpreted and certainly will trigger another round of questioning. This may defeat the whole point of the exercise. The statement could be read to imply we turned over the thumb drive and server to the State Department—which we didn't ("There they go again—misleading, devious, non-transparent, tricky etc."). I would recommend saying "to the Department of Justice."

2) Maybe it's only me, but "hand over" seems a little pejorative—how about just

Dear Activist,

Millions of Americans rely on Social Security for most of their income, but this year beneficiaries will not get a cost of living adjustment.

Senator Elizabeth Warren has introduced the Seniors and Veterans Emergency Benefits Act (SAVE Benefits Act) to give seniors, veterans, people with disabilities and surviving spouses who rely on Social Security a one-time payment of $580 to help make ends meet. It would be paid for by closing a loophole that subsidizes excessive CEO pay.

Please join CREDO Action in telling Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to allow a Senate vote on the SAVE Benefits Act.

Thanks for all you do!

Dear Friend,

Tens of millions of Americans rely on Social Security for a majority of their income, but this year -- for just the fourth time in the history of the program -- beneficiaries didn't receive a cost of living adjustment. Meanwhile, CEO pay has continued to skyrocket.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren has introduced a bill called the Seniors and Veterans Emergency Benefits Act (SAVE Benefits Act)[1] that would give seniors, veterans, people with disabilities and surviving spouses who rely on Social Security a one-time payment of $580 to help make ends meet. It would be paid for by closing a loophole that subsidizes excessive CEO pay.

Next week, Sen. Warren, Sen. Chuck Schumer and progressive groups will be delivering the signatures on this petition to Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell. Add your name to the petition now to help build pressure on Sen. McConnell to allow a vote on the bill.

Tell Majority Leader Mitch McConnell: Allow a vote on the SAVE Benefits Act. Click here to sign the petition.

In October, the Social Security Administration announced that there would not be an automatic increase in Social Security benefits in 2016, as there is in most years.[2] Right now, the average Social Security benefit is less than $15,000 per year -- and many of the tens of millions of Americans who rely on Social Security to get by desperately need a raise.

Meanwhile, CEO pay at the 350 biggest firms in the U.S. now averages more than $16 million per year -- over 1,000 times more than the average Social Security benefit. In 2014, the last year for which data is available, these CEOs saw their pay increase by 3.9 percent. Incredibly, much of this compensation slips through the so-called "performance pay" loophole, which allows corporations to deduct CEO pay from their taxable income as long as it is based on performance.

The SAVE Benefits Act addresses both of these problems at once by providing a one-time $580 Social Security payment that is paid for by eliminating this egregious loophole. It's a smart bill that will give a much-needed raise to our seniors and veterans instead of wealthy CEOs.

But Sen. McConnell has so far refused to allow a vote on the SAVE Benefits Act. That's why Sen. Elizabeth Warren, Sen. Schumer and progressive groups are organizing a big petition delivery next week. Add your name to our petition now to make sure it is included in the delivery.

If Clinton is Serious About Economic Populism, She Should Come Out Against Fast Track

John Nichols on April 17, 2015 - 0:39PM ET

Hillary Clinton has backed NAFTA-style "free-trade" agreements and she has opposed NAFTA-style "free-trade" agreements. Like other prominent Democrats, she has been inconsistent in her support of what is best for workers, the environment and human rights.
But Clinton has a chance to get trade policy right when it matters.

And when it matters is now .

As she launches a 2016 presidential campaign in which she seems to be interested in grabbing the banner of economic populism—going so far as to complain in her announcement video about how "the deck is still stacked in favor of those at the top"—Clinton can and should stake out a clear position in opposition to granting President Obama Trade Promotion Authority to negotiate a sweeping Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Despite overwhelming opposition from labor, farm, environmental and social justice groups, Congress is preparing to consider whether to provide Obama with the "Fast Track" authority he seeks to construct a "free-trade" linking the North American and Asian nations of the Pacific Rim. Imagine the North American Free Trade Agreement on steroids and you get a sense of what is at stake.
It is remarkable that the House and Senate would event consider surrendering their authority to make amendment, to provide oversight and to check and balance the executive branch on so vital an economic and social issue. Yet, the legislation has now been introduced and they White House and corporate interests are gearing up a massive campaign on behalf of Fast Track. If it succeeds, the TPP will be negotiated behind closed doors and with inadequate oversight from Congress.

No matter what anyone thinks about "free trade," as it is currently arranged to benefit multinational corporations that seek a race-to-the-bottom economics, or "fair trade," as it should be arranged to protect workers, the environment and human rights, no one who believes in openness, transparency and democracy should back Fast Track .

The practical arguments against "Fast Track" are clear enough. As Congressman Mark Pocan , a Wisconsin Democrat who serves as vice chair of the Congressional Progressive Caucus, says: "(Americans) have seen these type of 'free trade' deals rushed through Washington before, and we saw the results firsthand: closed factories, depleted industries and lost jobs. We cannot make the same mistakes of the past. If the administration wants to get the approval of Congress for this new agreement, we must take the time to conduct the careful and thorough oversight this measure requires."

The political arguments against "Fast Track" are, if anything, even clearer. Mark Perrone , the new president of the United Food and Commercial Workers union, explains that "no elected official, regardless of political party, who is truly interested in making the economy better and fairer, can responsibly support the TPP. Simply put, this trade deal, like so many others, is bad for our workers, families, and shared future. In the end, while we may not be able to change every mind, we will remember those elected officials who stood with America's workers by voting for jobs and against another destructive trade deal. More to the point, we join with the AFL-CIO and other unions that refuse to support any member of Congress that decides to put narrow self-interests above the interests of hard-working families."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Former Labor Secretary Robert Reich presumes that Clinton is in a tight spot. As Obama's Secretary of State she talked up trade deals, including the TPP initiative. As a senator, she backed some and opposed others. Reich says the question of whether to stick with Obama or to oppose his Fast Track request "could definitely be a headache for her in 2016 because it is so very unpopular among progressives." Democracy for America's Jim Dean amplifies the point when he says, "Like a vote for the Iraq War or statements of support for the Social Security-cutting Bowles-Simpson plan, a vote for Fast Track and the TPP will never be forgotten…"

Fair enough.

Politics requires hard choices—the title of Clinton's memoir.

Clinton should make one. Instead of sticking with Obama, she should stick with principles she embraced a senator. In 2002, she opposed granting President Bush Fast Track authority. And, as a candidate for the 2008 Democratic presidential nomination, she won states such as Ohio and Pennsylvania at least in part because of she declared that, "The United States should be pursuing trade agreements that promote human rights and worker rights, not overlook egregious abuses."

Notably, when she spoke to United Auto Workers members during that campaign, Clinton said, "Every trade agreement has to be independently, objectively analyzed."

The first place in which trade agreements must be independently and objectively analyzed is in Congress—before they are adopted. Clinton can and should state this truth, as she makes the hard choice to oppose the president she once served and side with...

Thanks Steve. I am generally trying to get us aiming in the same direction. Bernie has gone decidedly negative and personal and like most things maybe he can get away with it. But we live with a double standard, so I think it's a mistake to follow him down that path.

I sent this to Joel Benenson a few days ago. Thought I would send to you as well. Hillary has got to get away from Washington speak and begin immediately to find an emotional connection to regular Americans. She needs to have a greater understanding of what people and families are going through every day. And, then she needs to find an emotional connection. This has to turn around now. Her speechwriters, ad writers, communication staff – she and President Clinton – all need to cut Washington rhetoric from their vocabularies and all scripts. She also needs to be bold and not be politically calculating. Americans and certainly primary voting Democrats are sick of the Clintons being cautious and calculating.

She can win this, but she's got to find a way to connect with voters and stop worrying about Washington pols and press. The American people want to know if she gets them.

Joel,

I hope you are doing well and hanging in there. I've have kept my thoughts about the presidential race largely to myself, but I'm very nervous that she is losing ground (I don't know that since I'm not involved – just a hunch).

That being said, she should be connecting with voters in a better way. I just don't think she's using the right words.

The Clintons too often use language that is for Washington insiders and not for the rest of us out here in America. With Trump attacking Pres. Clinton for allegations of infidelity, she should not respond with "he can make personal attacks" or suggest that this is what Republicans have always done. Instead, she should make this a VERY PERSONAL MOMENT. She is failing to connect with voters – in large part, I believe, because she uses Washington speak. She should not just be connecting with women voters in a better way, they should be energized in a big way. She's failing in this regard. Dump the Washington political speak immediately – including partisan language. Replace it with words that average voters understand. When she talks about Trump or Cruz or other Republicans, she should attack them for their policies – not even mention that they are Republicans. I also believe she's making a mistake by attacking Sanders in a personal way. People grew tired of this from the Clintons. It's not what they want to see. GET A PERSONAL CONNECTION.

I don't know what the words are exactly, but she should say something like:

"While Mr. Trump makes these deeply personal attacks, he's far from perfect himself. I've been married to Bill Clinton for more than 40 years. He is and always has been the love of my life. We've raised an amazing daughter and I love being a grandmother. Our marriage hasn't been perfect – the vast majority of marriages aren't. While being in public life the majority of our 40 years together, the American people have heard more than their share. I've chosen my path – to make my marriage work. I don't walk away from a commitment. There are millions of women across America just like me and there are millions of loving couples who chose their path. As President, I will fight hard for American families – creating jobs, fighting to raise wages, continuing to ensure millions more have the protections of health insurance. I will do everything I can to help families get ahead and be more financially secure."

"The last thing Washington needs, the last thing America needs is a politician like Donald Trump to divide us, to create fear, to incite racism and constantly run people down. His mouth spews hatred. And while he might be speaking a good game for 30% of the Republican base, his shallow policies would hurt, not help the majority of the people who are in his camp."

"America is strongest when we are united. A true American patriot will vigorously defend our country from it's enemies. Donald Trump has a lot to prove to the American people that his words, actions and policies are best for America. I served as Secretary of State. I know what it means to stand strong against enemies abroad. While he throws political grenades in an attempt to win the votes of the extreme side of the Republican base, he has no clue how destructive his rhetoric is – how much it's dividing our country which makes us weaker. Politicians in Washington have done enough damage when they divide us – when they themselves refuse to work together for the best of our nation."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"As President, I will work my tail off to unite our nation to make us stronger. And, I will challenge any politician – Democrat or Republican – to get off the politics of destruction and join together to make America even stronger."

"Mr. Trump should also understand that American families need a champion who is f for their future. Donald Trump is so far removed from the daily lives of American families that he doesn't understand that his policies will kill jobs, will take health insurance away from millions of families, and put more guns in the hands of dangerous people."

For what it's worth – keep her grounded and always thinking about what American families are going through – not what is happening with politicians in Washington. Maybe none of this is helpful – but I hope it is. If there is anything I can do, please ask.

Best of luck to you and the entire campaign.

Subject:	Identified a flaw in Bernie's campaign: he is (effectively) saying he's better than Obama

John,

(Sara, please see that this gets to him, thanks.)
I ran this by the person I consider the smartest person in the Obama world (who was KEY to his re-election, and unfortunately doesn't work for you…), and he thought this was very important. I won't name him here.

The below couldn't come from your campaign because of HRC's vulnerabilities, but maybe from a friendly journalist or op-ed writer?

Think about this. Bernie says he will only take small dollar donations. That's fine for the primary. Let's say he spends $200 million and keeps up with Hillary. Then he gets into the general, and let's give him, generously $400,000,000 in small dollar donations. He needs a "social revolution" with millions coming out, especially young voters who are hard and expensive to turn out. How is he going to beat a $2 billion Republican machine? He is either going to have to take the big money from the Democratic machine, or lose. If he betrays his principles, he loses enthusiasm and followers. It's a Hobson's choice.

Here is the punch line. Barack Obama, a squeaky clean candidate who has had no scandals and who no one thinks is owned by special interests (the worse you can say is he makes too many concessions to them, or hires too many people from wall street), thought, in 2008, even with the wind at his back (Republican-caused financial crisis and unpopular war), decided to leave the limited public finance system and raise a billion dollars. Same in 2012.

So, and here's where Hillary comes in.

Dear Bernie, are you saying you are a better, smarter candidate than Barack Obama and his apparatus (new organizing, registration, data, turn out operations?). Are you saying the enthusiasm you have generated is greater than Barack Obama, or that you are a greater revolutionary? Are you saying Barack Obama was corrupt when he decided he needed a billion to beat the Republican machine? Get real Bernie.

Best,
Philip

The Internet of Things, or IoT -- interconnection via the internet of computing devices embedded in everyday objects, enabling them to send and receive data -- is one of the fastest emerging, transformative, and disruptive set of technologies based on the predication of an estimated 25 billion connected (aka "smart") devices to be in place by 2020.

- The exponential growth of the IoT will require the participation of manufacturers, vendors, regulators and legislators to identify and address potential risks and liability.
- These devices and sensors, which include wearables, ingestibles, systems inside moving vehicles, smart cities, home controllers and security systems, energy management, standardized and customized production environments, and mass transportation infrastructure, also bring into focus new lifespan issues, including security risks, authentication, privacy, data ownership and potential product liability on a massive scale.
- This ground breaking conference will offer attendees an IoT deep dive, providing incisive and cutting edge insight from legal and technology experts in the field.

Dear John,

This is my first email to you as the Democratic nominee in Kansas' Fourth District. This moment means so much to me and I am blessed to have your support that made our victory possible. Once again, my family and I thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

Our 80 percent victory against our primary opponent was great news for our campaign, but it was not the best news of the night. We waited for months to see who would survive one of the most destructive and expensive Republican primaries in Kansas' history.

Last night, we hit the jackpot.

One potential opponent was too close to me personally and ideologically. Another potential opponent could have easily spent another two or three million dollars of his own money.

The opponent we got is exactly who we wanted - and I cannot wait to get to work!

Mike Pompeo has spent more than one million dollars in his summer of negativity to make it clear that he's no moderate.
The race for the moderate majority in this district is on.
Please support our race today by clicking here to make a contribution.

I am proud of my record in the state legislature. And protecting the privacy of grieving military families will ALWAYS be one of my proudest achievements. Stopping these hate groups was so important to me that I made it my first act as a legislator and I will continue this commitment in Congress. Please click here to watch our ad about stopping these hateful attacks on grieving military families.

My opponent has a completely different record. He created jobs in Mexico and beyond. He accepted tens of thousands of dollars from shadowy national organizations. And despite repeatedly accepting taxpayer funds for his own personal companies, he hypocritically opposes public-private initiatives that help companies create and protect jobs.

I need you to please remember two things: First, we pulled the right opponent to run against and win this race. Second, we need your help to compete with the deep pockets of our opponent.

The maximum allowable contribution from an individual is now $2,400 and if you have the means to contribute at that level please do so right now.

Any amount you can contribute today will help us run a strong campaign. $105, $55, $25 or even $15 enables us to keep up the momentum and fund this very expensive General Election.

Once again, I am honored and humbled to be given this responsibility. I will do my job in Congress to project and secure jobs in Kansas. But I need your support right now to get it done.

Raj Goyle

How Washington Can Bolster a Stronger Climate Deal

By Pete Ogden
August 4, 2014

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Steam rising from a coal-fired power plant in Wyoming, March 2014. (Jim Urquhart / Courtesy Reuters)

On June 2, U.S. President Barack Obama proposed the country's first-ever federal regulation on greenhouse gas pollution resulting from existing power plants. The rule, intended to cut carbon emissions from the power sector to 30 percent below 2005 levels by 2030, is an indispensable piece of the administration's climate policy, which it has painstakingly assembled since a comprehensive energy and climate bill collapsed in the Senate in mid-2010.

Predictably, Obama's proposal set off a firestorm of political hyperbole. The Senate's top Republican, Mitch McConnell, decried it as a "dagger in the heart of the middle class," and John Boehner, speaker of the House, called it "a sucker punch for families everywhere." In fact, there is much about the rule to celebrate, including the notion that for the first time it puts the United States on track to meet its international commitment, made in 2009 as part of the Copenhagen Accord, to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to 17 percent below 2005 levels by 2020.

The Copenhagen climate conference, often remembered more for heated arguments and a chaotic conclusion than for what it achieved, was actually a turning point in international climate talks. For the first time, all major polluting states -- developed and developing -- agreed to stem their emissions. This was no small victory, and it is far from secure, as China, India, and other major emerging economies remain keen to restore and maximize the differences between their responsibilities and those of developed countries in the climate negotiations.

Fortunately, thanks to the newly proposed pollution rule and other polices, the United States is finally on a path to meeting its own Copenhagen emission reduction commitments. Its increased global credibility comes at the perfect time: At the end of next year, global leaders will convene in Paris to conclude the next major round of climate negotiations, where the United States can use its newfound clout to secure the gains of the Copenhagen agreement and reach a stronger, more durable deal.

A DEEP FREEZE

More than one hundred world leaders and tens of thousands of government officials, environmental activists, and journalists attended the 2009 Copenhagen conference, where they hoped to reach a new international agreement to combat climate change. But when Obama arrived in Copenhagen for the final day of the conference, negotiations were in what U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton would later call a "deep freeze." It fell to individual leaders to negotiate a deal or be party to a spectacular global failure. And it was not until the final evening, when Obama and Clinton interrupted a strategy session between Wen Jiabao, who was Chinese premier at the time, and the leaders of Brazil, India, and South Africa, that the final breakthrough occurred.

The resulting Copenhagen Accord -- which took the form of a pledge rather than a new set of internationally legally binding commitments -- was a major disappointment to those who had hoped for a new treaty or protocol. But it was only by departing from a new treaty arrangement that China, India, and all of the world's major economies could agree, for the first time, to reduce their greenhouse gas pollution.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That accomplishment should not be diminished. It marked a major step forward from previous rounds of negotiations. The 1997 Kyoto Protocol, for example, had divided the world into developed and developing countries -- according to classifications in the 1992 UN Framework Convention on Climate Change -- with only the former required to reduce emissions. Of course, such a permanent division is untenable for any twenty-first-century agreement aimed at curbing climate change, as countries that were classified as “developing” in the early 1990s are projected to account for roughly 95 percent of the growth in future emissions -- with China alone expected to make up half that figure. China’s emissions have tripled since 1990; by 2020, it could well emit twice as much as the United States. In Copenhagen, it wasn’t easy to get large developing countries on board, but in the end, they agreed, like their counterparts from developed countries, to cut emissions by a self-determined amount by 2020.

Having secured the deal, it was time for the United States to formally put forth its own target, which required a balancing act. On the one hand, an unrealistically high target would undercut the credibility of the entire accord. On the other, a cautiously low target would undermine the very purpose of reaching an agreement: to substantively alter each country’s emissions trajectory. The Obama administration hoped to thread the needle by selecting as its target the reduction set forth by the energy and climate legislation that was still winding its way through Congress.

When that legislation floundered the following year, however, the United States was left without a clear path toward fulfilling its international pledge. There was still hope, of course: Obama secured major new vehicle efficiency standards and took other steps that limited greenhouse gas emissions, while the natural gas boom displaced emissions from some higher-polluting coal plants. But it wasn’t until 2013’s Climate Action Plan that Obama articulated a clear strategy for reaching the Copenhagen goal. Moreover, it wasn’t until last June, with the announcement of the new regulations on power plants that this critical element of the plan came into focus.

It took a few years, but never before has U.S. domestic and international climate policy been so well aligned. And that too just in time for the final sprint to the Paris climate conference, where countries will seek to finalize a new climate deal to succeed the Copenhagen Accord after 2020.

Although a wide range of agreements may seem possible, the space for a viable deal remains quite limited, and failure is always a possibility. Still, the U.S. administration can maximize its chances of success by executing a strategy focused on securing the gains of the Copenhagen Accord and galvanizing new global action to meet the climate challenge.

THE PARIS PROJECT

First, the Obama administration must insist that all major economies commit to new emissions targets for the post-2020 period. The new deal should be modeled on the Copenhagen Accord, with countries held equally accountable to their targets and with an intensive international review process to encourage compliance. But this is easier said than done, as major developing countries will undoubtedly push for as much of a Kyoto-style firewall as possible between their obligations and those of developed countries.

Meanwhile, the United States must be clear with other countries about its own ability to comply with a new agreement. If the Paris deal takes the form of a legally binding treaty or protocol, for example, Senate ratification would be required for the United States to formally join. The prospects of such a ratification in the immediate future are dim, and the Obama administration should thus only support an agreement that it believes either doesn’t require ratification – as was the case with the Copenhagen Accord – or in which it could meaningfully participate while ratification is pending. Transparency here is key: The United States should not appear to be negotiating in bad faith even if other countries ultimately choose a deal that precludes U.S. participation.

Of course, as in Copenhagen, the dynamic between the United States and China will be critical in shaping any outcome. This time, though, there is some cause for optimism. When President Obama and Chinese President Xi Jinping met in 2013 at the Sunnylands estate in California for their first presidential summit, they agreed to support the use of the 1987 Montreal Protocol to limit the production and consumption of hydrofluorocarbons, a particularly potent greenhouse gas used in air-conditioning units and refrigerators. The agreement signaled that China was open to making climate change a positive and central feature of its bilateral relationship with the United States, something the Obama administration had pursued with intermittent success since 2009. The agreement was also important because it utilized the Montreal Protocol -- an international treaty designed to phase out substances responsible for ozone depletion – which has been successful in large part because it does not create the same distinction between developed and developing countries that haunts the international climate negotiations. This may presage a willingness by China to be similarly pragmatic in Paris.

STRONGER TOGETHER

The form the final Paris agreement takes will be of little relevance, however, if it does not include a plan to meaningfully alter the global emissions trajectory. The Copenhagen agreement left it up to each country to define what that would mean in practice, and since it remains infeasible to win consensus on a broad formula to allocate responsibility among countries, the Paris agreement will likely also be comprised of commitments determined nationally. This means that the United States needs to lock down its own target while also pushing countries to set ambitious goals for themselves.

The United States, in setting its target, faces a different challenge now than it did in the run up to Copenhagen. The 2009 energy and climate bill would have put U.S. emissions at roughly 42 percent below 2005 levels by 2030, but that legislation currently has no chance of revival. Obama's new Climate Action Plan, meanwhile, enumerates only the policies necessary to reach the country's target for 2020, not a longer-term goal. In the next few months, then, the United States must be willing to set an ambitious yet credible new target for 2025 or 2030 that commits to additional action beyond Obama's time in office.

Setting a strong target is only part of the challenge that the Obama administration faces. While the United States is the world's second-largest carbon polluter, it accounts for only about 15 percent of global emissions -- and its share is shrinking. A strong agreement, therefore, also requires aggressive action by the other major emitters. The United States, of course, can only influence other nations up to a point, but all goals will inevitably be measured against that of the U.S. target – the implicit benchmark. By sharing a strong target, the United States will affirm the credibility of its commitment to slashing emissions and encourage others to follow suit.

Strong country-by-country pledges will remain the backbone of the agreement, but the United States should also work with other major economies to identify collective milestones such as the current goal to limit global warming to less than two degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels. In the past, collective targets have been hampered by the familiar conflict between developed and developing countries. But if all nations are putting new commitments on the table, the timing may be right to build a new layer of international commitments on top. Countries could jointly set a date by which global emissions should peak and begin declining, for example. Or they might set a date by which they must double the use of renewable energy, or a clear timeframe for cutting global fossil fuel subsidies in half. Putting deadlines to these challenges brings them sharply into focus and helps to force countries to confront them while there is still time.

MONEY ON THE TABLE

In addition to helping set the goals, the United States has another job to do: It must help provide monetary assistance to developing countries that are trying to reduce emissions while responding to the adverse effects of climate change. Financial support, while justifiable in and of itself, will also go a long way toward building support for a broader agreement. Given that the climate conference has operated by consensus -- meaning that any of the nearly 200 countries could try to block an outcome -- a financial incentive would place significant pressure on China, India, Brazil, and other major emitters to reach an agreement. Failure to do so, after all, could cost poorer countries billions of dollars.

This dynamic was on display in Copenhagen. With negotiations stalled on the penultimate day of the conference, Clinton announced that richer countries would agree to mobilize an annual $100 billion of climate finance, from a mix of public and private sources, by 2020. The money, Clinton said, would be provided "in the context of a strong accord in which all major economies stand behind meaningful mitigation actions and provide full transparency as to their implementation." With money on the table for poorer countries, China, India, and the other major economies had a new incentive to reach an agreement.

Meeting that $100 billion goal, however, has been a challenge -- one that became even harder with the collapse of the U.S. energy and climate bill, which could have generated large amounts of climate assistance. The bill would have allowed U.S. companies to meet a portion of their greenhouse gas reduction obligations by investing in lower-cost reduction opportunities in developing countries, which alone could have generated more than $10 billion annually in green investments.

Despite the absence of such legislation, the Obama administration still managed to quadruple U.S. public climate assistance to $2.7 billion in 2013. But there is only so much more public money that Congress will appropriate for this purpose, and other donor countries are similarly constrained.

In this environment of fiscal austerity, donor countries should thus focus public money on helping vulnerable countries cope with the effects of climate change, while encouraging private sources to finance clean energy and energy efficiency. One notable success in the latter category has been the U.S. Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC), which has supported U.S. private investment in renewable energy projects in developing countries. OPIC increased its support for clean energy from $8.9 million in 2008 to a record-breaking $1.2 billion in 2013. Government agencies are now working to find and cultivate new opportunities for U.S. clean energy investment around the globe.

Meanwhile, instead of simply making new, larger financial pledges, donor countries should instead direct resources toward addressing key climate needs. For one, donor countries should find creative strategies to help developing countries reduce fossil fuel subsidies, which amount to more than $500 billion a year and drain resources that could be put to better use. One idea might be for donor countries to work with the World Bank to issue bonds to developing countries willing to repay them through money saved from eliminating subsidies. To help developing countries cope with an increase in extreme weather and natural disasters fueled by climate change, richer countries could also expand tools such as the Caribbean Catastrophe Risk Insurance Facility, which pools risk and provides rapid payout in the event of a tragedy.

Of course, the United States cannot simply impose its will in the famously fraught arena of international climate negotiations. Copenhagen showed how difficult climate talks can be. Still, it also demonstrated how much effort the United States and others are willing to invest in an agreement. Six years later, with climate change on the rise, the stakes have only intensified.

Just before leaving Copenhagen, Obama said to the press, “I believe what we have achieved in Copenhagen will not be the end but rather the beginning -- the beginning of a new era of international action.” A successful outcome in Paris next year could help to prove him right.

Dear friends and colleagues,

Happy 2016!

I'm writing to let you know that I've made the difficult decision to leave CAP at the end of this month to pursue a few consulting opportunities that are on the horizon. Although sad to leave CAP (again...), I'm looking forward to approaching my work in a consulting capacity. I expect I will eventually return to working full-time at a single organization in the future, but for now making this move feels the most fulfilling to me.

Thank you all for being great colleagues and friends, and for fighting the good fight.

My last day at CAP will be later this month.
Best,

Take Action for Clean Water!

We need you! You can help defend vital environmental protections - contact Congress today.

Dear Mary,

End Giveaways to Big Oil!

Congress and the President are currently debating whether to let automatic across-the-board spending cuts known as “sequestration” go into effect. If they can’t agree on an alternate plan, huge cuts will be made to vital environmental, health, and other programs. These are the programs that help keep our drinking water clean and our air healthy. Make sure environmental programs aren’t put at risk – contact your Representative and Senators today!

We need to take a balanced approach as we address the federal deficit. The plan must include new revenue, revitalize the economy, and protect and improve our environment.

We can do this by:

- Avoiding Further Cuts to Environmental Programs: These programs are only 1.25% of the budget, but provide enormous benefits such as cleaner air and water, and healthier communities.
- Eliminating Tax Giveaways to Big Oil and other polluting industries: Ending century-old giveaways to big oil companies would save billions, reduce harmful pollution, and reduce healthcare costs.

Congress has an opportunity to define a new course for our nation’s economy, one that recognizes that a healthy environment and healthy economy go hand in hand. This means avoiding further spending cuts to environmental programs and ending tax breaks for dirty fuels to ensure a stronger economy and healthier future for all Americans.

Send a message to your Representative and Senators today ! Tell them that instead of cutting programs that protect our water and our health, Congress should cut wasteful tax subsidies for Big Oil and Gas companies!

For clean water,

Bob Wendelgass, President & CEO

> The Walmart Corporation is the largest employer in the United States, employing about one in every hundred Americans. Unfortunately, America's largest employer sets a horrible example with its miserly wage policy. Walmart pays hundreds of thousands of their workers less per hour, adjusted for inflation, than minimum wage workers made 46 years ago. With rising housing, health and transportation costs, Walmart workers cannot make ends meet on less than $10, $9 or even, for some, $8 an hour. The cashiers and hourly sales associates at the White Plains Walmart close to your house, for example, live in a city with a living wage of — as estimated by the MIT Living Wage Calculator — $13.05, but most hourly Walmart workers are paid thousands of dollars per year below that standard. It's no surprise that one Walmart manager even admitted this disconnect between Walmart pay and fair pay by placing a bin out last holiday season to solicit donations from customers for his own needy workers.

Seventy percent of the positions subject to Walmart's hourly poverty wage regime are held by women. Most of these women are managed by men, who — despite making up a minority of the company's employees — make up a majority of Walmart's managers and officials. Irregular schedules and a miserly sick day policy make Walmart a difficult place for mothers to work. Take as an example one 33-year-old mother of two featured on ABC News a few years ago: she had to leave her daughter at home with a 103-degree fever because she was worried about her three sick day "demerits" issued by her Walmart manager. Worse over, Walmart's poverty wage regime drives down the wages and benefits of neighboring stores, again disproportionately hurting women, who make up the majority of the low-wage workforce in America.

Walmart could end this assault on their female "associates" by paying all their workers at least $10.92, which is the inflation-adjusted wage that the lowest paid Walmart workers — under their founder, Sam Walton — earned in the late 1960's. Before Walton's billionaire heirs cry 'Impossible!', remember: (1) Walmart pays all their workers in Ontario, Canada and Santa Fe, New Mexico over $10 an hour and still remains quite profitable; (2) Walmart had enough funds to issue $51 billion in stock buybacks over the past five years, which could have given every American Walmart worker a $3.50 per hour raise over the past five years; and (3) a 2011 U.C. Berkeley economic study showed that even if Walmart raised its starting wage to $12 and passed all the costs onto customers, it would only cost Walmart shoppers 46 cents more per shopping trip.

In 1986, when Bill Clinton was governor of Arkansas, you reflected a single case of women's empowerment at Walmart by becoming Walmart's first female director. During your six years as a Walmart board member, you honorably pushed for women's empowerment. Twenty eight years later, we are asking you to make far broader history again for women at Walmart by publicly pressuring your former board to end its poverty wage regime and restore the wages of hundreds of thousands of its female associates.

Here are four ways you can immediately activate your deep Walmart ties to help this important feminist cause:

1. Publicly encourage former Walmart CEO H. Lee Scott, who had dinner at your home in 2006, to build on his minimum wage raise support from nine years ago by urging his successor C. Douglas McMillon to follow in his footsteps by endorsing a minimum wage raise this year.

2. Publicly encourage Alice Walton, the Walmart heiress who donated $25,000 to Ready for Hillary last year, to use her power as a major shareholder to force a raise in the wages of the hundreds of thousands of Walmart associates who make less in a year of work than Walton does in 10 minutes from interest on her inheritance.

3. Publicly encourage Clinton administration advisor Leslie Dach, who you have worked with on labor issues recently, to leverage his role as a former Walmart executive vice president to pressure his successors to end Walmart's poverty wage regime.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

4. Publicly encourage Walmart director Aida Alvarez, who campaigned for you and was your husband's final Small Business Administration leader, to coordinate with other social justice-minded Walmart directors — such as former Detroit mayor Dennis Archer and civil rights activist Vilma Martinez -- to end Walmart's poverty wage regime.

Campaign funders like Alice Walton might be 'Ready for Hillary' to run for President in 2016, but Walmart's women have been 'Ready for Hillary' to stand up for the wages they deserve this year. It would be a shame to have your trailblazing legacy of Walmart women empowerment rolled back. We hope you can keep it alive by pressuring your former Walmart colleagues to raise the wages of its predominantly-female hourly workforce to $11, their inflation-adjusted 1968 level. This is no big deal: the workers have more than earned an $11 per hour wage, had it taken from them by inflation year after year, and will continue to until they can catch up with 1968, inflation adjusted.

Subject: Energy Innovation's New Report Series on California Energy Policy

Dear Herb,

California has long been a global leader in demonstrating environmental quality and economic performance can go hand in hand.

Governor Brown has indicated California's intention to continue its leadership in low-carbon solutions, by announcing 2030 goals to: 1) increase renewables in the electricity sector, 2) improve efficiency in the building sector, and 3) reduce fossil fuel consumption in the transportation sector.

So what can California do to meet these goals? In a new three-part report series, Energy Innovation offers our take on the answers.

The California Policy Report series consists of:

1. A blueprint to set and reach a 40% by 2030 carbon cap

2. Recommendations to decarbonize California's electricity sector

3. A sector-by-sector overview paper identifying the most important policy initiatives needed to reach California's climate goals

For decades, California has been a first-mover in energy and climate policies; from appliance and vehicle tailpipe standards, to renewable electricity requirements and the passing of AB 32 (the Global Warming Solutions Act). But now it's time to set an even higher mark.

Californians are discussing how the burst in clean energy and climate policymaking in the Executive and Legislative branches will play out: What policy initiatives are needed to capture the benefits of electricity system optimization that technology innovation has made increasingly more available? How can utility energy efficiency programs be reformed to reach a new level of performance? And how far can the state go in capping its overall emissions, to 40 percent below 1990 levels or more?

The California Policy Report series answers these questions and more, and keeps the state on track to reach a safe climate future, We hope you agree, and look forward to your feedback.

Katie says fifty-fifty that they actually get it together and get an agreement next week. On a 50-50 proposition, I come down on side of dysfunction. Seems to me the safer bet is that the senate doesn't get it together. So I would not be anxious to get that letter out this week - but let's discuss tomorrow.

Dear Mr. Podesta:

I am writing to you as a current donor to Secretary Clinton's campaign, a member of the Rockefeller family with a long and deep commitment to public health, and as a physician concerned about the health effects of fracking.

I spent the last seven years studying the health, environmental & climate side effects of fracking. Just before the fracking ban I presented a summary of health impact studies (attached) to then Acting Commissioner of Health Howard Zucker and Governor Cuomo. I felt very happy to have played an active part, as both a physician and donor, in the ban of fracking in NYS. The New York ban has inspired health-impacted people all over the United States and the world.

I am also writing you because I'm sensing among a number of donors (current and potential) a growing concern about what we see as a lack of clarity and firmness in Secretary Clinton's position on the air and water pollution from fracking in particular - and fossil fuel extraction in general.

To her credit, she has made an off-hand statement to the effect of the need to "cut back" on drilling, but nothing beyond it that I can find. We have looked at her statements in comparison to those of Senator Sanders. There is quite a contrast in the strength of his positions versus hers. In short, she has not offered a single specific proposal to crack down on even the worst excesses of the oil and gas industry's highly polluting practices.

I read your interview in The New Republic with great interest, and that is what inspired me to write to you. I know first hand that there is a growing hunger among the donor circles I am familiar with to hear more details of the commitments she is willing to make on things such as:

Methane (always accompanied by volatile organic compounds and other toxins in flow back and produced fluids) pollution leaks from existing infrastructure
Removing fat federal subsidies to drillers.

In addition my highest priority is to see Secretary Clinton acknowledge the health side effects of fracking, just as physicians do with all our drugs and procedures.

I believe the message of cutting the use of polluting fossil fuels for health and climate reasons will be very attractive to the voters the Secretary badly needs right now. Governor Cuomo's ratings skyrocketed after he banned fracking based on health concerns.

Speaking to you I'm sure would give me the insight I could take to fellow funders who share these concerns. I want to reassure them that Secretary Clinton understands these issues and that more commitments are forthcoming.

Please let me know if we could speak briefly and how best I can reach you.

Best regards,

Lucy

Friend --

The Republican-run Benghazi Committee has abused the public's trust and tax dollars to run a 17-month long "investigation" that even the House GOP leader admitted was an effort to drag down Hillary's poll numbers. Tomorrow, Hillary is going to testify before the committee, and I know she's going to do great -- but in order to keep fighting back against these attacks, she needs your help.

[LINK]Chip in $ASK, and help make sure we're equipped to keep defending Hillary against relentless GOP attacks.[/LINK]

Republicans aren't going to stop attacking Hillary after she's done tomorrow. They're going to exploit whatever they can to gain an advantage and mislead voters about Hillary's record. Earlier this week, one of them even threatened to impeach her on day one of her presidency -- when she hasn't even won the nomination!

We can't let these attacks go unanswered -- and with your help, we won't.

Chip in $ASK, and let's fight back:

Let me tell you something I know about Hillary: she's a pro.

Congressional theatrics don't phase her, and despite the Republicans' best efforts, she's damn good at staying focused and never getting knocked off-track. Tomorrow's hearing by the Benghazi Committee is one of the most politically motivated "investigations" we've ever seen -- and Hillary is ready to face it head-on.

We need to show that we're behind Hillary more than ever -- that when she sits down in the hearing room tomorrow, she'll be supported by hundreds of thousands of people cheering her on.

Will you donate $ASK before midnight, and show Hillary that you've got her back?

BLOG POST: Benghazi Post for HFA Blog

Hillary Clinton is testifying on Capitol Hill this morning. Here's what you need to know.
The Benghazi Committee, explained.
By: John Podesta

Hillary is on Capitol Hill this morning, testifying in front of the House Select Benghazi Committee. Here's what it's all about.

What happened in Benghazi

On September 11, 2012, a group of Islamic militia members attacked a U.S. diplomatic outpost in Benghazi, Libya. Four Americans were killed in the terrorist attack: U.S. Ambassador Chris Stevens, Sean Smith, Glenn Doherty, and Tyrone Woods.

For Hillary, who was serving as Secretary of State at the time, the tragedy is personal. She was the one who had asked the late Chris Stevens to serve as ambassador to Libya. She was with President Obama at Andrews Air Force Base when Marines brought home the caskets of the four Americans. Anyone who knows Hillary knows she isn't the kind of person to stand around wringing her hands after a tragedy–she leapt into action immediately to prevent anything like this from ever happening again.

The Benghazi Committee is the eighth - yes, eighth - congressional review of the tragedy.

The events in Benghazi have been scrutinized by countless panels, news organizations, and government agencies. After the attack, Hillary set up a nonpartisan panel known as the Accountability Review board (ARB) to investigate. The panel made dozens of recommendations for improvement. By the time Hillary left office, every single reform was on its way to being implemented.

After the ARB, seven congressional panels have also completed investigations. Five were led by Republicans. None found any wrongdoing. But even with these conclusive findings, House Republicans approved an unlimited budget—yup, we're talking about your taxpayer dollars—for an eighth congressional review. Enter the House Select Benghazi Committee.

The House Select Benghazi Committee has one goal

Now, if you're wondering why Republicans are still at it even after the thorough reviews–or if you're thinking that sounds a little fishy–you're onto something. Over the last few weeks, a number of key Republicans—from House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy to New York's Rep. Richard Hanna—have copped to the truth about why this committee was established in the first place: to "go after" Hillary Clinton and to hurt her presidential candidacy. A whistleblower has even come forward to say that he was fired because he objected to how partisan the inquiry was.

[video: McCarthy]

Trey Gowdy, the chair of the committee, has predicted the probe will continue well into 2016. Their aim is clear: Hurt Hillary's chances of winning the presidential election. And for those of you who are curious, no, the committee has not been able to produce any new facts about the attack.

What you'll hear today

"No one wants to find out what happened more than I do." —Hillary, October 24, 2012

Hilary's first priority is to get to the bottom of what happened in Benghazi. That's the right thing to do—and the way to make sure it doesn't happen again. That's why she has already testified on Capitol Hill about the tragedy (twice, in fact), and she has been asking to testify before the this committee for more than a year so that the public can hear her answers.

Republicans, on the other hand, are going to exploit whatever they can to mislead voters about Hillary's record. They'll grill her about emails and anything else they can think of to discredit her.

But here's what Hillary is going to do: Stay focused, clarify the facts, and offer some lessons that we can learn to protect Americans going forward. The men and women who serve our country deserve nothing less.

John,

The Republican Party has just released an ad attacking Sean. I wanted you to know first.

Of course, it's completely false.

But I'll tell you what scares me: false ads can work. If they go unanswered and if they're repeated often enough, voters will believe them.

And we know this is only the beginning. Sean's Tea Party opponent has a lot of cash and deep-pocketed outside groups backing her.

Right now, I need you to step up and help us get on the air with an ad of our own to defend Sean. It's the only way to win. Now that they're attacking us there's no time to waste.

Give $35 or more now to help Sean get on TV to set the record straight.

You know Sean's record. He was an integral member of the Clinton White House when this country saw enormous economic growth. He's ready to fight for working families here in New York by protecting Medicare and creating good jobs.

If every voter in our district knows about Sean – we win. That's why we can't let this ad sink in. It's why we must counter with our own immediately.

Will you help? Give $35 or more now.

Why the Public Option Is Not "Fading"—Just the Contrary

The Sunday New York Times ran a front page story headlined "The Fading Public Option." Since the beginning of the health care debate in April, the main stream media and purveyors of the Conventional Wisdom have regularly pronounced the public option dead and gone. But in fact they continue to be dead wrong.

In fact, the prospects that there will be some form of public option in the final health insurance reform measure this fall have actually increased over the last month. Here is why:

1). The odds have dropped that some sort of "bipartisan" consensus will become the final template for a bill. That has reduced the ability of Republicans to tube a public option as a condition of their support.

From day one, the Republicans were never going to support a public health insurance option for everyday Americans. The Republican party staunchly opposed Medicare forty years ago. Despite former House Speaker Newt Gingrich's hope that it would "wither on the vine," Medicare is now an unassailably popular public health insurance option for seniors. The Republicans and private insurance industry will do everything they can to prevent the American people from having access to another – undeniably superior – public health insurance plan.

The insurance industry desperately wants to protect its "right" to raise prices and take home huge profits – to skim off as large a portion as they can of every dollar spent on health care..

So the insurance industry and Republicans were never going to agree to a public option. What has changed is that the Republican decision to try to block health insurance reform has completely eliminated their leverage over what will be in the final bill. In the end, Democrats are increasingly clear that they will have to pass health insurance reform with Democratic votes – which we can – either by using reconciliation rules or by securing 60 votes for cloture from Democrats and 50 votes for final passage.

2). The pundits ignore the legislative facts on the ground. Four of the five committees with jurisdiction in this debate have reported out bills with a strong public option. The bill that passes the House at the end of this month will include a strong public option. Whether or not the bill that passes out of the Senate has such a provision, the House-Senate conference committee will likely send a final bill with some form of public option to both chambers for final passage. That's because a bill without a public option will have a hard time passing the House and a bill with a public option can, in fact, get more than 50 votes in the Senate.

3). The President has made it very clear that he not only supports a public option, but he will demand some mechanism to assure a competitive market place and drive down costs.

The Republicans played right into his hands with their new talking points on this week's Sunday news shows. Virtually every Republican argued that the Massachusetts plan – that requires everyone to purchase health insurance – has the highest health care costs in the country. Precisely. You can't force everyone to purchase insurance from private health insurers unless you create competitive pressure to control costs by giving consumers the right to choose a public health insurance plan.

The private insurers would love the government to require every citizen and most businesses to buy their product –who wouldn't.? What they don't want is regulation – or worse yet, competition – that prevents them from doing whatever they can to make as much as they can. And remember that the insurance companies are exempt from the anti-trust laws that seek to assure competition in other markets. They can collude, divide up territories and drive up prices until they're blue in the face.

An AMA survey, released in late January, gives a score gauging the concentration of the commercial market for 314 metropolitan statistical areas. The report showed 94% had commercial markets that were "highly concentrated" by standards set by the Federal Trade Commission and Justice Department.

In Maine, for instance, one company – Wellpoint – had 71% of the market. The second competitor was Aetna with only 12%.

There is another way to control the behavior of the private insurance companies when we mandate coverage – serious rate regulation – treat them like regulated public utilities.

Rate regulation is an even more serious political lift than a public option – which is also a much more efficient means of assuring competitive prices than rate regulation.

The pundits, insurance companies and Republicans need to get used to one idea. Many Democrats – including the President – will ensure that the final bill have some robust means of ensuring competition and controlling prices, and a robust public health insurance plan is the best option on the table.

4). Giving Americans a choice of a public health insurance option remains incredibly popular. A poll conducted for Americans United for Change by the respected firm of Anzelone and Liszt – completed last Friday – shows that, by a 62% to 28% margin, likely 2010 voters would be more inclined to support President Obama's healthcare reform plan if it included a public option that gave people a choice between private insurance plans and a public health insurance plan.

Voters like the idea of making a choice themselves – and not having the choice made for them by Republicans who are trying to defend the profits of private health insurers. The voters have been unaffected by the insurance industry-generated talk that giving them that choice would prove the demise of the private health insurance industry.

There are three major forces that keep pushing the notion that "public option is dead." First are the Republicans and insurance industry that want to weave a "public option is impossible" narrative in order to create a self-fulfilling prophecy. They hope that if public option proponents think it is impossible, they will give up. That motivation is completely understandable, but Progressives shouldn't fall for it – or contribute to it.

The second is a desire in the media to create a story that President Obama has "mishandled" the health care debate. That is simply wrong. President Obama has moved us closer to giving America universal health care than any other President in 60 years, and the odds are very good he will succeed where all others have failed.

But the third is the most insidious. It is the cynicism in the media – and Washington Conventional Wisdom – that anything fundamental cannot pass out of Congress. That there isn't any hope that everyday Americans can defeat the special interests. It is the same cynicism that convinced most of the "sophisticated" in-the-know Capitol Hill insiders that Barack Obama could never be elected President. And to that cynicism I give the same answer that we gave then, and that thousands gave at the President's Minneapolis health care rally on Saturday: "yes we can."

Subj: DRAFT Jim could you make this bifurcated overtime motion as concise as necessary

We are in full support and seek to improve working conditions for the in-home care providers who are precious to seniors and people with disabilities living active lives in the community. To this end we believe that a bifurcated approach to the overtime law is the best solution.

In private sector nursing homes and nursing agencies, the old concept of liability makes it such that these organizations cannot leave their client alone for an hour. This makes it a bad working condition for workers who cannot get lunch breaks or rest breaks. We entirely support this kind of labor protection in the private sector where liability requires round-the-clock attendance to one's patient.

But as is so much the case in in-home care there is no one-size-fits-all. Models for one type of client can be beneficial for one type of client while being very detrimental to another. In the case of publicly funded in-home supportive services in California, there are few caregivers who get paid for more than eight hours a day. That leaves 16 hours a day for meal breaks and rest time, which is clearly more than enough. There is no such liability requirement that makes the provider have to stay with the consumer 24 hours a day in the publicly funded in-home supportive services program.

Furthermore and most important, overtime laws in these publicly funded programs could have been extremely detrimental effect by cutting some providers income almost in half and providing no benefit at all. Almost 70% of caregivers are family providers. Those caregivers could see their hours cut by close to one half, because in the cash-strapped state like California, the chances of the state paying overtime are slim to none. What would likely happen is what is happening in many other states in this economic crisis which is that no one is being given more than 159 hours of work on month so that overtime and benefits do not have to be paid. There could be widespread misery, if suddenly a large amount of in-home supportive services providers or family members or who live in with a severely disabled people saw their incomes cut in half. If the state were somehow to pay time and a half for hours over 159 hours a month, then consumers would see a dramatic cut in service hours because of the finite revenues in the budget. There would be no one who would benefit from this arrangement except possibly the unions who would now collect two and three union dues from one consumers home.

In summary, while we are in full support of it decent working conditions in terms of meal and rest breaks, which there is more than adequate time for in the IHSS program, we feel that to pay overtime in the publicly funded in-home supportive services would not occur and would instead results in a drastic cut in hours making it difficult for some families to survive without adequate income and requiring them to have strangers provide care which they may not want.

Subj: Fwd: FW: Update on federal overtime regs

Thursday, January 17, 2013 3:21 PM

The White House asked the National Council on Disabilities to provide input on the draft federal regs on overtime. I was invited to be in the roundtable discussion and received the agenda & list of participants this morning. The agenda indicates that the final draft reg has been submitted to OMB – so the discussion is shifting from what is in the draft reg to actual implementation. The draft final reg under review by OMB is unchanged from the drafted we reviewed last Spring (attached are our comments & the draft fed regs).

The employer options for implementation are laid out in the regs: (1) pay overtime to all personal care assistants, (2) pay overtime to some providers based on criteria that can be set by the employer, or (3) limit the amount of compensable time providers can work.

It is my understanding that OMB has 90 days to review the draft reg and the clock started 1/15/13 – to the deadline for OMB action would be around 4/15/13. The effective date is normally 30 days after the final reg is published in the Federal Register. The worst case scenario seems to be that fed regs would go into effect in May. Counties obviously have no fiscal exposure because of the new MOE. But the impact on consumers, providers, counties and Public Authorities could be huge. I've reached out to the state to talk before I participate in the roundtable on January 30th.

Denver--ProgressNowAction launched a national create-your-own McCain billboard contest. Billboards that are created by the public are then posted online at http://mcsame.us and visitors can vote for their favorite billboard. The winner of the contest will be placed on a billboard in downtown Denver.

"How many times have you seen a billboard or bumper sticker and thought you could do better?" asked Michael Huttner, the Founder and Executive Director of ProgressNowAction, a rapidly growing online progressive advocacy organization with sister organizations in ten states. "Here's a chance to use your creativity for a good cause - educating people about John McCain."

ProgressNowAction launched a national contest to find the best description for McCain in five words or less.

The website can be viewed at http://mcsame.us

"Public perception of John McCain is very different than his right-wing record and questionable ethics," noted Huttner. "The media is giving him a free ride but we can't. It's up to all of us to help our fellow Americans understand who McCain really is."

ProgressNowAction.org, posted entries on http://mcsame.us where thousands of fellow network members can rate the entries.

ProgressNowAction plans to use the best and highest-rated entries for actual billboards, bumper stickers, yard signs and other visibility efforts in the months ahead.

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear Friends,

Here is the latest on LCV's work:

What's Next for Clean Energy and Climate Policies

The environment lost many good friends in Congress this election, and the way forward to create new clean energy jobs and solve the climate crisis will not be easy. But just because something so important is difficult does not mean we give up. LCV is pushing ahead to enact critical policies to protect the environment and public health in the states, at the Environmental Protection Agency, and through other administrative channels. Please take a look at my Huffington Post article to learn about LCV's priorities here .

Happy 40th!

The Environmental Protection Agency's Administrator Lisa Jackson has written a guest post for LCV's blog in commemoration of the 40th anniversary of the EPA. The EPA was formed in 1970 in response to unprecedented environmental crises in the United States, from dangerously polluted rivers to toxic chemicals found in foods. Since its creation, the EPA has made tremendous progress in safeguarding public and environmental health, but much remains to be done. Read Administrator Jackson's post on our blog here .

"Sarah Palin's Alaska" Rings False

Last week, LCV sent an email to our members urging them to sign an online petition opposing corporate sponsorship of Sarah Palin's new reality show—which even a Republican strategist admitted was nothing more than "one big cable buy" to advance her political career—and we clearly hit a nerve! The petition was our most successful online action of the year, already generating over 25,000 signatures. Add your voice here !

Just Released: LCV's 2010 Environmental Facebook

Check out LCV's just-released Environmental Facebook, which summarizes the backgrounds and environmental positions of newly elected federal candidates who were endorsed by and/or financially supported by LCV and/or a state LCV. You can access the Environmental Facebook here .

LCV welcomes these newly elected environmental champions, as well as returning friends, and looks forward to working together with the 112th Congress and the Obama Administration to defend and strengthen sound clean energy and environmental policies.

As always, please visit www.lcv.org or follow us on Facebook to learn more about LCV's current priorities and what you can do to get involved. Thank you for all that you do for us.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinksi

Subject:	Re: U.S. Conference of Mayors

Just wanted to circle back with folks.

The updated schedule has come out and Mayor Lee would like to hold this event from 8:30am - 9:15am. He would hold it at the hotel across from the conference site. Mayor Lee would extend the invite to every Democratic Mayor in attendance (current and former).

If everyone is okay with this we just need to do the following:

1. Make sure HRC is okay with this plan
2. Tell Cochran that we aren't going to address the bipartisan body due to scheduling conflict

Would love to lock this in tomorrow AM if possible.

Thanks,

Brynne

Update –

We have spoken to Mayor Lee's team and they would love to host an informal coffee with HRC for Democratic Mayors to stop by on Saturday morning. They are suggesting 8:30am – 9:30am. Because Obama is attending on Friday their entire schedule has been thrown off – we are waiting to get an updated schedule to confirm that we aren't going against anything important at 8:30am.

Two Things:

1. The Mayors team would want to know what we are saying to Cochran so his politics can be covered on that end
2. When would we want Ed Lee to extend this invitation to the Democratic Mayors

Thanks,

Brynne

Spoke to Huma and Podesta and they suggested we reach out to Ed Lee and ask if he thinks its feasible for him to put together something informal in a restaurant in the hotel that the conference is taking place or close by to just host a coffee for folks to stop by at and say hello before the fundraiser.

We have a call into Lee's team. Will let you know what he says. He may tell us it will be too difficult.

Have we decided what we're doing yet? Huma?

Politically we will get hit from some mayors on this but I personally think it'll be fine. And not many mayors are super delegates, otherwise I would feel differently

I Gideon Rodeh I have been corresponding with the White House for many Years beginnings as Early as Nine Eleven Horrendousness trying to avert such a recurrence by any feasible Technique According to my analysis a breakthrough advent has appeared with Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows:
2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation causing its Desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:
1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV
Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire

13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?
18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health
19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV

20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!
21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up
Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!
22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 70,000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!
23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.
24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able indicating a monumental achievements, He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence
25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming

26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite
My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!
27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.
28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

We discussed the possibility of John doing some conversations off the record with key reporters prior to Tuesday night, given the possibility that they may end up spending a huge amount of coverage time on Tuesday talking transition. Management out here has agreed to this – Plouffe would like me on those calls which I'm sure John won't mind, and we should draw up a plan.

My sense is that we talk to one person at each network, the Post, Times, and AP. We do it Tuesday on an off-the-record basis to inform their coverage and chit chat Tuesday night. I'd be concerned about broadening this group out much but you guys may disagree.

Thoughts?

Will definitely get leaked!
Well I'd suggest some set of this group hop on the phone to discuss the following in advance of HRC brief:
--Policy she should be ready to discuss or get questions on and thoughts on how to engage (I assume she has the substance cold)...the word "messaging" is too strong because we want her to be candid and frank, but you get what I'm talking abt. Would be good to list areas of likely disagreement. Maybe this has been hashed out already.
--How she should define her intentions. I assume EW will ask.
--What she can ask EW's advice on. What she could ask EW to help with or provide further thinking on--I think she should be armed with next steps, since it's a way to keep the dialog going.
--Thoughts on press strategy, for follow up discussion with Mindy
--Anything else anyone should loop back with Mindy or Mandy on before the mtg

But I think everytime EW says something interpreted as not being effusive enough or critical, she hears from a Neera, Gillibrand, Mandy or we suggest that Dan talk to her policy person. Basically her people are saying say enough already, lets just talk direct.
We should assume meeting will leak as we are currently doing it at a hotel in Boston and I am sure they are prepared for that too. We conveyed that we are happy to meet wherever EW wants.

Might make sense of us to brainstorm a bit in advance as well.
I just think it would be good for HRC to go into the mtg with one or two objectives. And some potential action items to get EW's help on. Has Mindy given any intel on what EW wants/needs/hopes for? Or could Mandy provide some intel? It would just be such a big deal for this meeting to go well and have EW walk out feeling positive and on board. And then there's the press question--not sure how high the chance of a leak is, but it would be good to have a joint plan with Mindy in the event it gets out to shape coverage. Or to proactively leak if that's what EW wants. Not a bad

This is all really helpful. On the Warren meeting: should there be a short, small call to discuss what her goals for that meeting should be--what input she wants on policy, what she should ask for, what we think Warren is going to challenger her on, etc? Seems like that could strengthen her briefing.

On Tue, Nov 18, 2014 at 1:20 PM, Huma Abedin <Huma@clintonemail.com > wrote:

I am sorry I missed the meeting although I was able to get detailed downloads here in the office. A few things I was going to mention at meeting that I flag for your situational awareness. Happy to share further details:
1. A unified message: Brynne and Nick were probably too polite to raise it last week but it has been a total zoo in the office since November 4th (not that it wasnt a zoo before). Like all of you, the questions we get asked 20 times a day is a. where is she and what is she doing? and b. what are John and CDM doing?
Our answer is as honest as possible. We are giving her the time and space to think through the things she needs to think through. We acknowledge that there is policy process continuing and that is fairly well known. And if people have 2016 ideas, we are happy to have them. On John and CDM, we say you have been her closest advisors for a hundred years and that hasnt changed. Since we have never discussed this as a group or agreed on what to say, sharing with everyone.
2. Progressive friends:
- Elizabeth Warren: We confirmed this meeting last week. It is set for December 4th. We were having problems with them because this was supposed to take place in June. They do not want intermediaries discussing the relationship or the potential policy differences as they feel that is happening too much. They want to have a direct conversation about economic policy.
- Bill de Blasio: I stay in touch with him and his team a lot. He has recently asked to have increased direct access to her so he can tell his progressive partners what she thinks about issues important to them. He also thinks he can be most helpful to her if he has that kind of relationship. He wants to be seen as the loudest progressive voice for her and in order to do that he needs access. In the next 6 months, someone else will have to inherit this relationship because it will not be tenable for HRC.
3. Schedule issues 2015:
- We ended up locking in ALL her remaining paid speaking offers a few weeks ago. She reviewed them all with you at meeting so you know everything.
- Listening Tour: I know you discussed. Just a note that she only loved it in hindsight. Also flagging that we have some repair work to do in some early states like NH and Iowa based on activity of the past year.
- Morocco: No matter what happens, she will be in Morocco hosting CGI on May 5-7, 2015. Her presence was a condition for the Moroccans to proceed so there is no going back on this. Important that you know background.
4. Constituency Groups:
- Emilys List: Their 30th year gala is March 3rd, 2015. They have been lobbying for her attendance for over a year. Need to keep in mind for whatever other March activities we discuss. We have other EL issues we should discuss in next call/meeting.
- Executive Action: We have now heard from 1 friend in community saying specifically "we planning on getting more aggressive in our stance with Hillary (showing up at events and in press statements). if possible she should support executive order before the President". Need to assume starting TOMORROW, our friends will show back up at her open press events.
- LGBT and faith community: We have friends in both groups that want to start now or at least be part of steering committees on behalf of HRC and are in a holding pattern.
Random:
- We should be thoughtful about any group that wants to rent Friend of Hillary list now because there is interest. This is also probably best discussed off email.
Sorry to be so long!

Folks

HRC wants to have a meeting on Thursday at 10am in Chappaqua. It will likely last until 2pm or 3pm. If you can coordinate your schedules accordingly to be there that would be ideal.

In addition, Robby and John will do a pre-call -- likely on Monday afternoon or evening depending on what is best for folks' schedules. There also will be read-ahead materials shared on Tuesday.

Hey all. I wanted to forward on this email from Rand and Heather that addresses Rand's new post as DHS Counselor and NSN's work head.

Looking forward to working with all of you soon!

Subject: A New Year's Update from NSN

Dear friends and supporters:

We would like to wish you a happy new year, update you on NSN and proudly announce that Rand Beers, our President and founder, will be joining Homeland Secretary-designate Janet Napolitano's staff.

As we celebrate the inauguration of President Obama; the installation of a wiser, saner foreign policy team; and the arrival of a larger progressive majority in Congress, a strong progressive national security voice outside government is needed more than ever. Progressive ideas need alternative channels to gain attention, a fair airing in the media and a defense from conservative attacks. Legislators and advocates need education and messaging support. Our community needs conveners who will bring experts and advocates together and keep the momentum growing to build real grassroots support for our ideas and link into the grassroots political revival now underway.

NSN's board, leadership and staff are committed to providing that national security voice outside government. We are already shaping the debate over the Bush legacy, educating the new Congress, pushing the policy debate forward on Iraq, terrorism and dangerous weapons, and advising our friends on the "inside." NSN is very much "open for business" and intends to stay that way. Les Gelb, the chair of our Advisory Board, likes to remind us that in 1981, after Ronald Reagan's inauguration, the Heritage Institution grew substantially in order to do for the conservative revolution from the outside what Reagan was doing from the inside. We aspire to no less.

We're a "network" in name and reality because we cannot do our work without you. We've been gratified at how many top experts – on India and Pakistan, Israel and Palestine, non-proliferation and terrorism – made themselves available in the waning days of 2008 and the first days of 2009 to help us answer requests from partners inside and outside government. Our board responded to the tough economic environment with a commitment to 100% giving and a significant year-end push; our foundation partners have responded with welcome renewals and exciting new support. We hope that you will match the generosity shown by our Board and foundation partners by remaining committed to the work and mission of the National Security Network in early 2009.

To that end, we've moved ahead with four key goals for 2009:

1. Strengthen progressive national security rapid response through our operation, the only one of its kind, which supports progressive policy ideas from diverse sources including Administration initiatives, and responds to conservative attempts to discredit progressive ideas and make them a liability for governance.
2. Fill the policy vacuum provoked by the transition and the focus on economic issues, by educating our core audiences (Congress and rising political leaders, national and local media, advocacy partners) on policy basics; moving better ideas into the debate; and helping coordinate and win the major national security policy debates.
3. Intensify and better-coordinate local outreach designed to build and diversify outside-the-Beltway constituencies for progressive ideas on national security.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

4. Convene, coordinate and de-conflict to build transparency, trust and coordination among progressives, advocates, and rising and established national security experts.

To meet these goals, we are already:

- Distributing a daily national security policy and messaging update to more than 300 Hill staff, advocates and journalists;
- Convening top progressive experts to write papers and fill the policy vacuum on Iraq, non-proliferation, terrorism and other issues;
- Holding briefings for Members of Congress and staff on Gaza, India-Pakistan and other topics;
- Sending top experts and authors to national audiences in the South, Mountain West and Midwest to develop local debate on the war, weapons of mass destruction and other issues;
- Working with the media (and informally assisting the White House and State Department transition) to drive storylines and push back conservative public relations on issues, such as Gaza, and breaking news such as Bin Laden videos critiquing Obama;
- Working with the media to drive consideration of the Bush legacy and its responsibility for our current national security predicament.

We are giving the following statement about Rand to the press this morning:

> Secretary of Homeland Security-designate Janet Napolitano has offered, and I have accepted, the position of Counselor to the Secretary in the Department of Homeland Security. It has been an honor to serve as an informal advisor to the Obama campaign and a member of President-elect Obama's transition team, and I now look forward to serving in a senior capacity within the Department and as a member of the Obama administration. With many great challenges ahead of us, Governor Napolitano, myself and the entire Obama national security team are determined to make certain that the federal government, state and local officials have all the critical tools, information and capacity to keep America as safe as it can be. I am proud of the work the National Security Network has done in moving our national security dialogue forward. That task will be more critical than ever, and I leave with great confidence that it will be carried forward by the capable hands of the NSN staff, led by Heather Hurlburt.

NSN's most fundamental strength is its members. We ask you to join our board, staff and stakeholders in committing to keeping our progressive national security infrastructure a force to be reckoned with – by contributing to task forces and events; by attending meetings, blogging and speaking to the press; and, in these challenging times, by making a financial contribution (to the National Security Initiative, c/o Linda Parker, 1225 'Eye' Street NW, suite 307, Washington, DC 20005).

With all best wishes for the New Year,

Rand Beers	John Hall	Heather Hurlburt

All,

Attached is a document that our research team put together on McCain's connection to the health care and insurance industries, his fundraising, selected lobbyists, etc.

Feel free to use this, send around, etc.

One startling figure: McCain's campaign counts 38 lobbyists from the health care and insurance industries who are either on staff or raising money for the campaigns — these 38 lobbyists have received more than $140 million in fees from their health or insurance clients since 1998.

MIKE BEEBE INFO:

Wife: Ginger Beebe

- Thank Governor Beebe for participating in the Priorities event with Paul Begala organized by Franklin and Mack McLarty in Little Rock this past Wednesday. Express how important that is to electing HRC.

- Mention to him that we just announced HRC will be visiting Little Rock again on Monday, Sept 21 for a fundraising event for her campaign. Please ask him to help raise for the event. It will be at the home of Kaki Hockersmith and tickets will be $2,700 per person.

- Calista Kersh, the campaign's Arkansas Finance Director, can follow up with his staff.

BACKGROUND:

Beebe served as Governor from 2007-2015. Prior to that he served as Attorney General of Arkansas, as well as serving in the State Senate. He is currently Of Counsel at the Roberts Law Firm in Little Rock. The firm has several areas of concentration, including international, anti-trust, utility law, and government relations. Gov. Beebe currently live in Searcy (pronounced Sir-sea), Arkansas, and is an AVID golfer.

During his tenure as Governor, Beebe never had an approval rating lower than 70%, and was the architect of the Private Option in Arkansas, which allowed the state to use federal Medicaid funds to purchase private insurance for low-income residents. The plan was huge success and has benefited some 200,000 residents. Additionally it has made Arkansas first in the nation in the reduction of uninsured residents since 2013.

There is no doubt that if he could have pursued a third term, Arkansans would have elected him. He remains an incredibly popular figure in this state.

John has been awhile.. President Clinton's administration to be exact. If you recall I work for John Catsimatidis, wealthy New York businessman and close to Fr. Alex.

Just to refresh, Catsimatidis is a billionaire here in the City whose wealth is derived from real estate, refineries, supermarkets and airlines, and these days he also has a radio program which airs on Sunday mornings. Details below.

I am not quite sure how or if you can help with this, but John told me to contact you. As you can see from the attached list I have call-in guests from every walk of life and elected office, but I have not been able to get anyone from the administration, largely because I don't know anyone from the administration.

I have calls into almost every cabinet office and agency but so far no luck and I would seriously like to balance this program with a few representatives of President Obama.

We tape during the week at the convenience of the guests. The program airs on Sunday mornings. To everyone's surprise the program is growing in popularity.

So I will leave it at this. If there is anyway you can help, or extend some credibility to his call, it would be greatly appreciated.
